By United Press International
St. Louis county authorities today planned to wipe out the menace of wild dog packs in the wake of the killing of a young boy by a savage band of "curs."

A United Press International survey showed concern over the possibility of similar tragedies in other areas.

Little Mark Douglas Draper, 2½, was killed Saturday when he was attacked by a pack of killer strays and dragged about 75 yards behind his home. The mangled body of the son of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas C. Draper was found by a neighbor in the St. Louis suburb of Hazelwood.

County Supervisor James H. J. McNary ordered an inquiry into the adequacy of the county's dog catching service. He said he also would seek a Health Department report on personnel and equipment in the rabies control division.

are needed they will be obtained," McNary said.

Other Danger Areas

Elsewhere, Gerald Eddy, Michigan conservation director, warned there was a good possibility that a killer dog pack could turn on humans in Michigan. He said snarling packs of wild dogs roam many areas of Michigan.

Police officials in Chicago said dangerous dog packs have been seen roving in some parts of the city despite local laws prohibiting dogs from running loose.

At Indianapolis, city and county police warned that any animal "running at large" will be picked up or destroyed, even if it has a license.

The crackdown was prompted by the St. Louis slaying. In other cities, particularly those with strict leash laws, officials discounted the possibility of stray dogs forming into vicious packs.

Spokesmen at Los Angeles said they saw little chance of wild dog packs attacking humans due to strict leash laws and vigilant roundups of loose dogs.

Hours after the mangled body of the Draper boy was found a posse of 150 police and citizens roamed the Hazelwood area armed with shotguns, riot guns, pistols and clubs, killing stray dogs on sight.

All the dog involved in the attack on the boy were believed to have been killed. Police Chief Albert J. Talley said the killer dogs were part of two or three packs of strays roaming the party-wooded suburb during the last eight months. None of them wore tags identifying them with an owner.
