Most Women Prove Steady In Secretary Positions

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
New York—(UPI)—It's a woman's privilege to change her mind about her job. Yet one study of feminine stability shows we are not as fickle as some bosses would have you believe.

This study was made by "Today's Secretary," a magazine for the business girl, which will publish the results in its June issue. More than half of its continuing panel of 750 white collar girls said that they had been punching the same time clock for at least five years.

Thirty per cent had changed jobs only once during the five-year period. But the remaining 20 per cent had switched positions more frequently and gave reasons ranging from "the boss barrier" to a candid "I was fired."

Money Main Reason
The wanderers listed lack of advancement, unsatisfactory salary and unpleasant office conditions among reasons for straying. They were looking for great job opportunity and more responsibility.

"I now work longer hours, have less vacation and drive 30 miles a day," said one secretary. "But I realize I am an important part of this organization and am contributing to its growth."

"I just wasn't kept busy enough at my former job," said another. "I was afraid that laziness would become a habit."

And a third secretary said she now has a boss "who respects my mind." Only nine per cent of the panel listed boss trouble as the reason for job change.

"My boss is a dream... I love him," said one legal secretary who has held her job well beyond the five years. "Oh don't misunderstand," she added, "I love him as a boss only. He's a married man with seven children."

Changes Mostly Successful
Almost all of the women who had made job changes recently said they had found what they were looking for. Few had left the old job under unpleasant circumstances; most agreed their bosses were happy to have them find better positions.

However, a few said, as did one panelist, "we both cried." Those who stayed gave a variety of reasons for "enjoying the work" to "earning a good salary." Incidentally, more placed pleasure in the work above the pay check in reasons for staying. A few confessed "lack of initiative to change jobs"; others said "relocating after you're 40 is difficult."

Not all the explanations were orthodox. One panelist said: "My work is so complicated and I have so many details in my head, I couldn't leave with a clear conscience."

New York—(UPI)—"To-may-toe" or "to-mah-toe"? Say it either way—both are correct. That's the word from a brand-new (Webster's) dictionary. This marks the first time a dictionary has not attempted to prescribe one correct way of pronunciation. It is based on actual word usage by educated Americans.

Teen Age Girls Say Slang Left For Beatnik Use

By MARY PRIME
United Press International
New York, June 7—(UPI)—Adults who try to talk the teen-age lingo can relax. The teens are leaving slang to the beatniks.

That's the word from eight teen-aged girls visiting New York from across the United States.

"Slang is dying. Kids only talk that way in junior high school or the movies," said Kathie Lee Mary, 16, of Oakland, Calif.

"The most we say is 'sharp.' We're trying to act more grown up and use bigger words," she added.

Slang is almost non-existent in Hawaii. "The nearest we come to it is Hawaiian, I guess," said Noelani Forsythe, 17, formerly of Honolulu, now of Chevy Chase, Md.

Anyone who wants to enrich his vocabulary still has a few slang expressions to draw from, however. For example: "Grubby"—everything bad. "Potty"—also bad.

"If I want your opinion, I'll rattle your cage." "Swinger"—anyone who is someone.

Six of the girls are winners in a fashion council competition sponsored by a national magazine (Seventeen). They are Jill Jacobs, 15, of Chicago, top winner; Dianne Dicks of Indianapolis; Barbara Kidd, 17, of El Paso, Tex.; Babs Schaefer, of Augusta, Ga.; Joan Lee Udeli, 17, of Cleveland; and Miss Mary.

New Representatives
Miss Forsythe and Sue Bartlett, 18, of Fairbanks, Alaska, the daughter of Sen. E. L. Bartlett, were chosen to represent the new states.

Despite the demise of slang, the teen-agers still cling to fads in clothing. Girls today wear white lipstick, white pleated skirts, trench coats in rain or shine, tennis shoes (dirty), or sneakers without socks. Hair is done in an "upside-down pony tail"—a ponytail worn like a fan or papacake on top of the head.

Steady dates were matching skirts and exchange rings, keys, I.D. bracelets and religious articles.

Miss Sacramento's Career Aided by Beauty Contest

Sacramento, Calif.—(UPI)—When Patricia Williams was an unknown secretarial student, she said she thought the most important thing needed to launch a singing career was "a break."

When she was selected Miss Sacramento and became the first Negro girl ever to win a preliminary for the Miss America contest, she got that break.

Miss Williams, who is five feet six inches tall and measures 36-24 1/2-37, is still bewildered about offers from television.

The daughter of an electronics technician at McClellan Air Force Base, Pat did not intend to start a crusade when she entered the contest. She just wanted to try for the title "like any of the other girls."

However, after it was all over, Miss Williams said she felt like "a Jackie Robinson of beauty contests."

Great Honor
"It's a great honor and it just goes to show that all we have to do is try for these things and they will come our way," she said.

Miss Williams, a favorite with the audience at the Miss Sacramento contest from the beginning, broke up the talent part of the show singing a Lena Horne-like version of "Lover, Come Back to Me."

After the contest was over, she admitted she hadn't practiced that number at all. But she discovered the night of the contest that the orchestra had no arrangement for the song she had originally planned to present. So she was forced to arrange a substitute.

Like many popular singers, Pat admitted that "I can't read a lick of music."

To Study Music
She intends to use a scholarship which she received as a prize in the contest to attend a music school and "learn what I am singing."

The 18-year-old beauty graduated from Grant High school near here last year. She was selected the school's basketball queen, an honor which also had been given to her sister two years earlier.

Pat said she decided to enter the contest as a lark. She went into her bathroom and put on a bathing suit and looked at herself in a mirror.

Then, she said, she asked her family if she should try for the title and they told her she "had nothing to lose."

Surprised to Win
"But we never thought I'd win," she said.

Pat's singing career began in the high school choir. Later she became a member of an all-girl quartet and then became a soloist.

"I love to entertain in front of people," she said, explaining why she would like to make a career of singing. "But I don't think I would, really like the life of a singer."

Miss Williams was born in Louisiana but her family family moved to California when she was five years old. She says she has little memory of her life in the South.

She will compete in June for the Miss California title.

Stagger System

New York—(UPI)—Staggering's just fine in the kitchen. Experts on the use of electric ranges suggest the stagger method in making several cakes and/or pies at one baking. Do not place the pans on the upper rack directly over those on the lower rack, they say. Also, to maintain even circulation of heat, keep at least two inches clearance around each pan.
