The Philippine Independence Day is the same as that of the United States, July 4.

LAST TIME—Graduating cadets at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point throw their hats in the air at the end of their training period. This class of '59 will be the last to participate in the colorful tradition. From now on the cadet corps will be equipped with official service caps which can be worn as officer's caps after changing the insignia.

Tendency To Belittle Bond Market Lacking Earlier Vigor

By ELMER C. WALZER

New York–(UPI)–Not long ago investors didn't have a single good word for bonds. Common stocks took top - rating in all discussions.

Now there's still a tendency to belittle the bond market, but it lacks the vigor of the earlier antipathy.

People are beginning to look at bonds and talk about their high yields in contrast with low-yielding stocks.

Articles are being written calling attention to senior securities. Even the current stock exchange magazine, "The Exchange" has a page devoted to them.

"The Exchange" points out that on the basis of letters received, most of its readers are primarily interested in equity investments–common stocks.

Many, however, assert their chief investment objective is income.

Bonds Underrated

"Perhaps," says 'The Exchange', "some of these investors are missing a bet by not looking into the merit of sound bonds.

"If they usually offer less prospects of capital gains than the best common stocks, high grade bonds are generally safer than equities."

"The Exchange" publishes a list of 20 bonds with yields above 4 per cent, and notes all of them show returns of one per cent or more above the current yields for many prominent stocks.

Eldon A. Grimm, analyst for Walston & Co., also writes on high yield bonds–a utility around 5 per cent, government bonds, 4-¼ to 4-½ per cent for some issues; municipals as high as 8 per cent, and notes all of them show returns of one per cent or more above the current yields for many prominent stocks.

Eldon A. Grimm, analyst for Walston & Co., also writes on high yield bonds–a utility around 5 per cent, government bonds, 4-¼ to 4-⅜ per cent for some issues; municipals as high as 8 per cent to 10 per cent for those in high tax brackets.

"People who buy strictly for yields," says Grimm, "now would favor bonds over most common stocks. This would apply to elderly people, bank trust officers, insurance company officials, pension fund trustees, university officials, high-bracket taxpayers who buy municipals."

Grimm points out, however, that common stocks may "yield" more than they pay out, because only part of earnings are paid out to shareholders. There might be a growth factor too.

Sometimes, he says, common stocks go too high temporarily and the growth factor can be anticipated too far in advance.

Prophetic Words

Incidentally, that phrase from the magazine, "Investor" to dig up a statement by Ward Winkler, economist, in 1948.

"The stock market" said Winkler back there, "is not only discounting the future but the hereafter."

Grimm finds common stocks more popular than bonds because they offer a hedge against inflation. Also common stocks may raise dividends.

All common stocks are not considered good inflation hedges. One of these groups is the utility.

Recent declines in utility stocks are ascribed to the fact that the utilities are moving yield issues and hence must adjust to higher yields reflected in the bond market.

But there are growth utilities too, according to Grimm. He cites among them, utilities operating in such states as Florida, Texas, and Arizona.

All-Time High

Noting that the average yield of 20-year bonds is currently at an all-time high, Alexander Hamilton Institute says. Most bankers and economists agree that while bonds prices may go still lower, the investor at today's prices can hardly go wrong over the longer term.

Of course, it adds, "we are thinking of good quality bonds, which vary in price with interest rates, rather than than some speculative situations which may or may not work out, and, therefore, belong in the hands of the speculator rather than the investor."

It's a Mechanical Age For Some Mice, Too

During the summer it was pleasant. Food was plentiful, the living easy. But when the air gets frosty, the mouse clan seeks a warm building.

For the young and inexperienced mouse, born outdoors, there are many strange and dangerous contraptions as well as hazards with which he must acquaint himself. To live inside a house he must develop a slight flair for mechanics, for he will be in contact with dangerous things.

Refrigerators, for instance. The lower part of these machines afford many hiding places for a mouse but he must exercise judgment. He must adjust himself to spinning wheels, rapidly traveling belts and dangling wires. When the machinery starts, the mouse who has decided to live alongside the motor will experience some anxious moments.

Dangerous Fan

Usually there is a fan whirling with a nasty hum that can cut him in two. There's also a certain vibration. At first this must shake the little animal until his teeth rattle. Every time the motor starts or stops the mouse will become vibrant with the motion.

The mouse in the engine room of the refrigerator must sense the fact that if he can adjust himself to the shaking and rapidly moving wheels and belts, he will be really sitting on top of the world. The advantages of his adobe cancel out the danger and the noise. On a cool night the motor heat is comforting. He is in a place where the family cat can never come. Even the housewife seldom looks in the engine room compartment.

And if by some strange coincidence of nature a little girl mouse comes to live in the engine room, his cup of joy runs completely over.

Offspring

A little later, if no accident befalls such as a snapping trap, a litter of baby mice will come to gladden the nest. Mr. and Mrs. Mouse don't know it but their children, born in this mechanical environment, also will be faced with problems that mice born a few years ago never had to contend with.

For from their first glimmer of consciousness their world shakes every few minutes; every time the refrigerator motors starts. By the time they are big enough to leave the home nest to start out on their own, they have almost acquired the "shakes." It must be somewhat disconcerting to leave this strange, vibrating world and stand solidly on the immovable kitchen floor for the first time, to find that the larger world is more stable than they knew.

Even when the motor-impulses of their mechanical "home" is left behind, in spite of themselves, they probably will continue to shake and vibrate. Environment can do some strange things — even to a mouse.

Adams Youth Wins Two Steer Prizes

The Dalles – (UPI) – Roger Rothrock of Adams won the grand champion steer and also the reserve champion steer prizes Tuesday at the annual 4-H and FFA livestock show and sale here.

It was a repeat performance for young Rothrock. He showed the grand champion and reserve champion steers in 1956.

Northeast Oregon high school boys topped the FFA livestock judging contest with winning teams from Wallowa, Enterprise and La Grande.

Garry Willet of Wallowa was the show's high individual in judging all animal divisions of beef, sheep and swine.

Grant county's team won the 4-H livestock judging contest for the second straight year. Charles Adams, 15, Clatskanie, was high individual 4-H judge.

Collier Changes Party to Democrat

Yreka–(UPI)–State Sen. Rudolph Collier has changed his party affiliation to Democratic. The change was filed in district court by the registrar of voters, Louis Sbarbro.

Collier, the senior Republican, now will become the junior Democrat. He has been elected in the primaries every four years since 1938. Collier represents Siskiyou and Del Nort counties, both heavy in Democratic registration.

"My decision to change my registration to Democrat was not arrived at hastily," the senator said.

"I feel that in the light of current governmental developments in California, my ideas and principles are more in line with the philosophy of the Democratic party than with any other political organization."

The University of Santo Domingo in the Dominican Republic was founded in 1538.
