

LIKES HIS PAPER

Los Angeles - (UP) - A noisy burglar proved no match for a testy newspaper reader Thursday. James A. Wigmore, 85, just can't stand to be bothered while reading his paper in the dignified California Club. The burglar rattled the window climbing in. "Get out of here!" shouted Wigmore. The burglar got.

DRIVERS' TEST

Dallas, Tex. - (UP) - Sharon Asher, taking her first test for a driver's license, became more and more nervous as the examining highway patrolman jotted down her minor mistakes. The patrolman added up the score and announced she'd passed. "My gosh, I'm glad that's over," Sharon said. "I'll never drive again!"

Small Worlds Around Us
By Lynn M. Watkins

Chimp Posed With Pretty Girl
Bongo seemed not in the least impressed that a young college girl wanted her picture taken with him. Like all things that happened unexpectedly, he took this occasion, too, with his usual equanimity. Any creature as sophisticated as a chimpanzee faces things philosophically, and seldom becomes flustered at any new gimmick.

I've been assured by scientists who are supposed to know, that every action and behavior of the chimpanzee is purely instinctive; but in spite of it, whenever I am in the presence of one of the manlike apes, I never can quite overcome the feeling that there are thoughts racing through his mind that I don't understand.

I was thinking about this when I opened Bongo's cage, awakened him, and opened the door. He rubbed the sleep from his eyes, extended his hand for human guidance with a "what's the pitch now" look on his face.

He watched as we drove away and I wondered what he walked along beside me, and looked up with what seemed to me to be a look of mild perplexity on his dark face; evidently he was thinking it over. Perhaps he was stalling for time, for he became suddenly conscious of an irritation on his left forearm; a sandfly or some other small insect had apparently settled there.
