Money Made At Designing Goes For Art Collections

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

New York — (UPI) — Seventh Avenue, the heart of the nation's fashion industry, rapidly is turning into one huge art gallery.

Designers sketch the fashions we women will wear each season — then go out and buy the art of others.

The French-born Pauline Trigere, who holds numerous awards for her clothes designs, collects Picasso drawings. Julius Hochman, an official of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, collects lithographs.

Designer Jane Derby owns several valuable 18th century pastels. Sidney Wragge, owner of B. H. Casual Wear, concentrates on works of modern American artists. And designer Adele Simpson refines her collecting even more — she gathers the works of young painters from San Francisco.

Mollie Parnis, who designs most of Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower's clothes, owns works of Toulouse-Lautrec and one valuable Matisse which she loans on occasion to the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Aldrich Gallery Impressive

But the most extensive collection of all belongs to Larry Aldrich, a dress manufacturer since 1927, an art purchaser since 1947. Aldrich, a neat, scholarly man, said he has "around 150 paintings and

To clean felt baby shoes, remove cardboard inner soles and laces, and wash shoes gently in lukewarm soap or detergent suds. Squeeze ribbon laces through clean suds. Rinse and blot moisture with a towel. Stretch booties gently into shape and insert inner soles. When dry, brush felt to restore fluffiness.

The first warm days call for cool fruit punch. Add fresh strawberries for color and flavor, and dress up individual servings by spearing a berry on the end of each straw.
