About one-thirteenth of the earth's crust is aluminum, it has been estimated, but aluminum is not found in a metallic state in natural form.

Back Stairs: New Home for Ike's Son?

BY MERRIMAN SMITH
UPI White House Reporter

Washington—(UP)—Back stairs at the White House:

Some folks in Gettysburg who are fairly close to the Eisenhower family say that the John Eisenhowers may transfer their residence shortly from Alexandria, Va., to the family farm in Pennsylvania.

John, a young Army major who is about to be a Lieutenant Colonel, is currently assigned to the executive offices as assistant White House staff secretary. He and his wife and their four children live in nearby Alexandria, where three of the kids are in private schools.

The story in Gettysburg is that they are considering moving more or less permanently to their cottage on the northwest corner of the Presidential Gettysburg farm.

Under such a plan, John would commute daily to his job in Washington and the children would attend the public schools in Gettysburg.

If these Gettysburg stories are true, John is in for a lot of auto riding. That is, if he makes the round trip daily. The arm is about 85 miles from the White House.

The driving time each way runs between one hour and 45 minutes to two hours, depending on route and traffic conditions.

There always is the possibility that the Gettysburg neighbors know only part of the story and that the John Eisenhowers might be thinking of moving only for the summer. Their home on the farm would make a thoroughly adequate permanent residence, however. The dwelling once was a red school house, but when the President's big house was built, the school was converted into an attractive two-story home with a white brick veneer and a relatively large yard with plenty of play space.

Arizona Home Seen

There also are a few people in Gettysburg who know the President moderately well and who believe that when he leaves office, he will not retire to the seclusion of his big, handsome farm home. Some say they think he'll establish some sort of winter residence in the West, possibly in Arizona where the weather is decidedly warm during the colder months in the East.

Whether such speculation has any real basis is difficult to establish, but it is true that Eisenhower in the protracted periods on the farm when winter brings freezing and frequently wet weather to the Gettysburg area.

If the President continues to use Gettysburg as a base of operations after January, 1961, he probably would spend most of his time there in the spring, and again in the late summer and early fall. These are the best times of the year at the farm. The summers can be cruelly hot even for those with air conditioned houses.

Gold Trophy on Desk

The President's press secretary, James C. Hagerty, now has on his desk a glistening gold trophy presented to him by the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences. It was at the academy's recent Washington dinner that Hagerty, in the unblinking glare of live TV cameras and
