Sing for Freedom or Tame Tag

Mabel Inglin

Here's a tuneful version of tag. The player who is IT chases the others, but they can't be tagged if they stop, stand still with hands clapsed, and sing, even if it's only a song title.
It must be a different song each time; if IT catches them singing the same song, they can be tagged. The person tagged then becomes IT.
This game is harder than it sounds!

Let's Draw a Rose Ann Davidow

Here's a little swirl
that shows
The very center of a rose.

In summertime the roses
bloom,
Giving off a rare
perfume,

And are the fairest in
the world
When all their petals
have unfurled.

To the eyes and to the
nose,
There's nothing sweeter than a rose!

Strike Up the Band Marion Ullmark

This Fourth of July why not have your own rhythm band? You can march, play patriotic songs, and have your own parade!

Here are some of the instruments you can make. A coffee can makes a fine drum, with pencils to beat out a loud sound. Two old pot lids make perfect cymbals. Dried beans in an empty baking-powder can add rhythm and zest. And if you can find an old washboard, put a thimble or two on your fingers and strum up and down it. Listen to the rousing racket that makes! In fact, after a practice session or two, you can surprise everyone with your special marching band and give a real holiday performance.

ON FOURTH OF JULY

by Nancy Clinton

On Fourth of July! On Fourth of July! We go in our for some
rides, and Max
takes his and I take my and my
and my besides. We ride to a
and we take off
our and our
and wade around,
then we dig with our
and we build a sand
till a knocks
it over again. And we play with our until calls, "Lunch!" and then we eat and
and nice
the kind only can make.
And when Lunch is over and we're tired of games we sit in the shade of a
and tells us stories and we wave our
and sing to the Land of the Free!
