

Virus Possibly Cause of Goiter, Doctor Declares

Atlantic City, N.J.—(Science Service)—Goiter may be caused by a virus instead of a lack of iodine.

The incidence of goiter throughout the world rises and falls in some specific areas and acts like a virus-caused disease, Dr. Isidor Greenwald of New York University (College of Medicine) told the American Medical Association meeting here.

In Switzerland, for instance, the number of goiter cases has dropped the past 200 years, he said. However, there are a great many cases of cretinism in Switzerland. This disease is characterized by stunted growth and mental retardation. Cretinism is known to be caused by goiter, Dr. Greenwald said. Many Swiss babies have goiter when born, he pointed out.

Fewer in U. S.

In the United States, there are fewer goiter cases than in Switzerland. Yet Americans do have a relatively high rate of hyperthyroidism, overactive thyroid glands. This disease is also linked with goiter.

The Japanese supposedly eat many sea foods and thereby receive enough iodine in their diets, yet they have a high rate of goiter and hyperthyroidism. Contrary to the Swiss, who also have a high goiter rate, the Japanese do not have the problem of cretinism.

Because goiter can produce different diseases in two countries—cretinism in Switzerland and hyperthyroidism in Japan—it is possible that goiter is caused by a virus, he asserted.

Outbreak Recalled

Dr. Greenwald recalled a serious outbreak of goiter in livestock in the states of Washington and Montana in 1915. The animals were fed iodized salt and their goiters disappeared. Dr. Greenwald said the outbreak resembled a virus-caused communicable disease.

A lack of iodine should not produce such different effects in different countries, or in the same country at different times, as has been observed in Italy, he said. But a virus infection might act this way, he concluded.

Brides, Grooms Said Youngest in Nation's History

Washington—(Science Service)—Today's brides and grooms are younger than any other in the nation's history, the Population Reference Bureau here reported.

The average age for first marriages in the U.S. last year was 23 for men and 20 for women. More girls married at 18 than at any other age.

In 1890, men averaged 26 at first marriage and women averaged 22. Since then, the average age has been declining slowly but steadily.

Idahoans Youngest

Last year about 45 per cent of women marrying for the first time and slightly more than 13 per cent of first-time grooms were less than 20 years of age, the Bureau reported. Idaho's newly married couples were the youngest, with brides averaging 19 and grooms 22. Connecticut's were oldest, 22 and 24.6 respectively.

The Bureau offered no reason for the trend toward early marriages.

Factors believed to contribute, however, are the nation's continued economic prosperity, the G. I. Bill of Rights financial aid to college students, making it more possible for them to marry while still in school, teen-agers "going steady" at progressively younger ages, and a significant percentage of pre-marital pregnancies in young girls.

Many Remarriages

The Bureau also reported that about one-fourth of last year's marriages in the U.S. were remarriages. One of every 20 divorced women that remarried was a teen-ager. Divorced men remarried on the average, at 36 and divorced women at 31.

Last year's marriages, the Bureau said, were the fewest since 1939. This was attributed primarily to the 1958 business recession, although the low birth rates in the 1930s and the high birth rates since 1945 were given as secondary reasons.
