

Governor Long Rests Following Campaign Trip

Winnfield, La. — (UP) — A tired looking Gov. Earl K. Long rested in his "little pea patch" today from the rigors of campaigning for reelection. The Louisiana governor, sleeping under covers in a fully-lighted bedroom of his tin-roofed farm retreat at Winnfield, got in the most sleep Sunday and Sunday night since his release from the last of three mental hospitals June 26. "Friendly Visit"

Dr. John T. Mosley, Long's Winnfield physician, visited with the governor early Sunday evening. Mosley joined Dr. Paul Pratt, a psychiatrist who has not left Long's side since his release from mental hospitals, but it was reported the visit was considered only a "friendly visit" and had nothing to do with the governor's heart condition. Plans to Resign

Long, who is ineligible to succeed himself, served 11 months to fill out one term and is completing his second full term. He plans to resign, however, to make himself eligible for a record fourth term. A hog fence guarded by state highway patrolmen kept newsmen at their distance Sunday. Long made five appearances Saturday. He made short speeches at Cameron, Lake Arthur, Eunice and Ville Platte. He also appeared at Lake Providence and asked the voters to send him back to the capitol at Baton Rouge.

Witnesses To Leave Wednesday For Convention

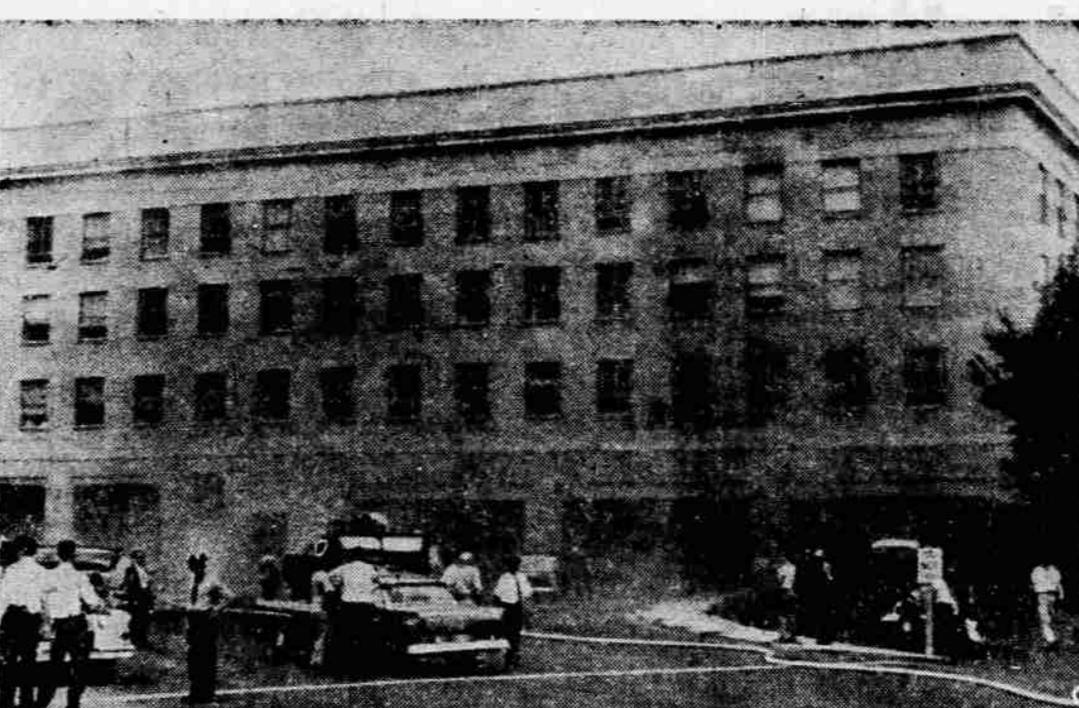

Nearly all Jehovah's Witnesses from the Medford congregation will leave Wednesday for Eugene, where they will attend the four-day "Awake Ministers" assembly of the faith slated for July 9 through 12, it was announced here today by T. R. Thompson, presiding minister.

In announcing the plans for the local delegates Thompson said that it has been necessary to cancel all regularly scheduled kingdom hall meetings this week end.

Witnesses from 90 congregations will be represented in the 4,000 to 6,000 persons expected to attend.

Highlight of the convention will be Sunday, July 12, when principal speaker E. D. Rosam Jr. of New York delivers the free public Bible address: "When God Speaks Peace To All Nations."

Other speakers from the country's happier, more innocent days. It would be hypocritical to say people didn't care about the dollar—but there weren't all these tax angles to worry about. It's a little more hard-bitten now. Or, as a wit put it recently, "In modern-day show business, the team that plays together rarely stays together." (Next: The great movie teams.)

Indiana Pair First To Land at Spokane In Powder Puff Race

Spokane, Wash. — (UP) — Two women fliers from Fort Wayne, Ind., were the toast of the town today as they waited for the other entries in the annual Powder Puff Derby from Lawrence, Mass., to cross the finish line here. May Ray Ringenberg and her co-pilot, Lois Layman, touched down in their Beechcraft Bonanza at 5:30 a.m. (p.s.t.) Sunday after the last leg of the race from Helena, Mont.

"I was trying to fly all the way into Spokane because, to my knowledge, no one has ever covered the complete Powder Puff Derby distance in one day," Mrs. Ringenberg said.

Forced to Seek Holes
Mrs. Ringenberg did not achieve her goal since the race started from Lawrence Saturday. But she said, "had it not been for weather conditions which forced me to turn back several times to look for a hole in the clouds, I would have made it in one day."

She added that she did not expect to win the race because of the "par speeds" assigned to different planes. These speeds gave all contestants an equal chance since they were racing the clock instead of each other. The winner will not be

CHARGES DROPPED
Dulwich, England — (UP) — A dozen motorists will receive letters of apology this week from the policemen who arrested them for speeding. All were clocked on a 440-yard hill. A court has ruled that speeding tickets may be issued only after a motorist has been clocked speeding for at least 528 yards.

Glen Canyon Dam Project Struck

Page, Ariz. — (UP) — Workers began picketing the $421 million Glen Canyon Dam construction project today in a dispute over subsistence pay. Work on the Colorado river project came to a standstill at 6 a.m., with only a few administrative employees remaining on the job to operate essential services.

Nearly 700 workers will be affected by the strike, which was called by laborers, operating engineers, and other building and construction trades unions because the prime contractor, Merritt-Chapman and Scott, refused to pay $6 a day subsistence. The contractor maintains Page is no longer a remote area because the community offers housing, stores and other services for workers.

Person Has Right to Enjoy Air in Natural State

A rendering plant was located outside the city limits of La Grande and the odor from the plant during the summer months was very offensive to many inhabitants of the city because of the direction of the wind in that season.

Restraining Order

Several citizens brought a suit to restrain the rendering company from maintaining and operating the plant. The court permanently enjoined the plant owners from operating the plant during the summer or at any time it would become a nuisance to the citizens.

clude smoke from the heating of homes and exhaust from automobiles issued within the usual degree of efficient operation.

Quite often in the public interest statutes and ordinances are enacted making it a crime to pollute the air.

A recent development is the anti-smog ordinance of the city of Los Angeles that makes it a misdemeanor and cause for restraint for cars that give off unusually objectionable fumes to operate on the city streets. The city now may require the installation of a device that will remove nearly all of the noxious gases and particles from automobile exhausts.

America's Top Entertainment Teams Split for Varied Reasons

Editor's note: This is the first of three dispatches telling what's happened to some of the famous entertainment teams of the recent past, and why such partnerships are becoming increasingly fewer.

By RICK DU BROW
UPI Hollywood Writer

Hollywood — (UP) — America's top entertainment teams have discovered that united they stand—but divided they stand to get richer.

The result is that taxes—combined with death, disagreement and the desire to "go it alone"—are breaking up most of show business' favorite partners.

Death has taken a heavy toll. Just last March, it took Lou Costello from Bud Abbott. In recent years, it has also taken Oliver Hardy from Stan Laurel and Fred Allen from Portland Hoffa.

A bitter personal argument split one of the great comedy teams of all—Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis.

Many other teams have broken up because one or more of the partners wanted to "go it alone"—either for personal satisfaction or tax purposes, or a combination of both.

Tax Stand Explained

These include the Marx Brothers; Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca; the Dead End Kids; Jackie Gleason, Art Carney and Audrey Meadows; and the Andrews Sisters, back together again but not nearly as successful as before their split.

Why do taxes figure so prominently? Veteran showman Eddie Cantor explains it this way:

"Suppose you get $7,500 a week as a team. That's $3,750 apiece. If you can get booked as a single, there's a good chance you'll get $5,000—or $1,250 more. And believe me, with taxes the way they are, that's becoming more and more the way performers think.

"Regardless of the difference of opinion of people like Dean and Jerry, they found out they're better off economically apart. And the younger kids have taken note. There are some young teams, but most of the kids work as singles if they can possibly do it."

Taxes have had another important effect: Many of the famous teams of yesteryear work only occasionally because they are well-heeled and can't see the sense of laboring for such small returns.

Among these are Ole Olsen and Chic Johnson, Phil Harris and Alice Faye, the Ritz Brothers, Lum and Abner, and Fibber McGee and Molly—who will be portrayed by two other people on a television series next fall.

What major teams are left, then? The answer, sadly, is there are only a handful—among them Lucille Ball and Dezi Arnaz, Amos 'n Andy, Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy, and Louis Prima and Keely Smith.

The Three Stooges are making a comeback thanks to TV re-runs of their films, and Jimmy Durante and Eddie Jackson work together when they're talking.

The big question, of course, is: "What causes feuds between successful partners?"

Said Cantor: "It's like any business. Money is one thing—but every actor has a certain amount of ego, and it's a wonderful feeling to know he doesn't have to depend on anyone when he's on."

This was the case with Abbott and Costello, Martin and Lewis, the Andrews Sisters, and Jackson and Durante.

Abbott Never Bitter
Abbott and Costello broke up in 1957. Early this year, Lu started a new solo career as star of Minsky's "Follies of 1959" in Las Vegas, Nev. Abbott never was bitter, however. When Costello died last March, he wept: "The door was always open to start again. Poor little Lou—he's dead, dead."

Recently, Abbott announced that he and veteran vaudevilian Eddie Foy Jr. would form a new comedy team. Until then, Bud had refused to work, saying he was practically broke and there was "no use" trying to earn money when the government would only take it to satisfy back-tax claims.

Most people thought Martin and Lewis were ideally teamed until they split. Then Martin said: "After a while, Jerry got out of hand and began pushing me out of the picture. When you talked about Martin and Lewis, you thought of Lewis, and I knew it had to be that way. Now I'll know it's me they're coming to see."

Single at Heart
Lewis also was a "single" at heart. Jerry said: "I'm not going on for money. I could retire now and give my family all they need. Retire at 32? They'd bury me at 34." Both Martin and Lewis have done well on their own.

The Andrews Sisters, on the other hand, flopped when they split up in 1953. Maxene and Laverne couldn't find a replacement for Patty, the blonde star of the trio, who quit because "I wanted to expand as a performer." Patty did well as a single, but in 1956 she rejoined her sisters.

Three-Man Act
Durante and Jackson were partners for 42 years until last year when the Schnozzola took on a new teammate, Sonny King. Jackson, deeply hurt, left, saying: "I'm divorced from Jimmy. He's a sweet guy, but I know I can make it on my own." He failed to set the world on fire, however, and last April he rejoined Durante and King in a three-man act in Las Vegas.

A show business historian could go on and on listing teams, but Cantor sums up the feeling of veteran performers well: "Teams flourished in this
