DEPICTS GUARD
Hollywood—UP—How officers are trained in the Coast Guard, the nation's oldest sea-going armed service, is depicted in Walt Disney's feature, "Cruise of the Eagle." The picture was filmed during the annual 69-day cruise of the training ship "Eagle," a tall-masted, square-rigged barque.

An estimated 50 miles of permanent piping for water lines and steam services are installed for Empire State building tenants.

The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez
Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Clinic

Are Enemas Bad?
It is curious that hundreds of us doctors keep telling our patients, "for goodness' sake, never take an enema." For 40 years I have been asking my fellow doctors why they say this, but so far no one has given me a good reason. Most say that they have met neurotic women who were taking two or three enemas a day, and they didn't want their patients to develop "the enema habit." Seeing that I can interview a thousand women without finding one with "an enema habit," I can't get excited about the danger.

I, personally, have never seen anyone who had been hurt by enemas. I once saw a woman who gave me the evidence I was looking for. She said that for over 10 years she had taken at least two or three enemas a day. What interested me so much was that she brought with her a stack of x-ray films, showing what her colon had looked like every year during the 10 years. On comparing the size of her colon when she started taking enemas with its appearance and size when she came to see me, it was obvious that her bowel had not been stretched at all, as many doctors have feared it might be. Then, when I looked into the woman's bowel with a lighted tube, I saw perfectly normal mucous lining.

Equivalent of Tears
If people will put into a bagful of warm water a rounded tablespoonful of table salt, they will get the equivalent of salty tears. Just as tears don't injure the eyes, so the salty water won't injure the inside of the colon.

In order to empty much of the colon, the person must be willing to stand a bit of discomfort. As she runs the water in, painful cramps will come. With each, she should pinch the tube for a few seconds until the cramp passes and then she should let the water run in again. If she lets all the water in the bag run in, and then lets it run right out again, her colon almost will certainly be well cleansed out. What many people do is to let the water run out the minute they get a little cramp, and this means that they will empty only the rectum. Often, this is not enough to bring relief of distress.

When taking the enema there is no sense in getting into the knee-chest position or lying on the floor. In many cases enemas are much better.
