The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine. Emeritus Professor of Medicine Mayo Clinic

In a recent number of the British Medical Journal, Drs. Easson and Aitkin-Swan collected information from Consultants who had informed 93 men and 138 women that they had cancer, and had recorded their comments that these patients made. Some 153 out of the 231 said right off that they were glad that they had been told the truth. Curiously, 44 stuck their head in the sand, and later denied that anyone had told them they had cancer. Some 17 expressed disapproval, and 17 had nothing to say.

In Great Britain, people still have the idea that the word cancer means an incurable disease. British doctors have long followed the old idea that they should lie to the patient with cancer, and this fact, of course, influences the opinions of people.

If doctors always fail to tell people with cancer what they have, then those many who recover and stay well after an operation do not know from personal experience that cancer can be cured.

In a survey made in Manchester a few years ago, 64 per cent of the people interviewed said that they didn't think that cancer could be cured. Here in America, I think many people know that if cancer can be gotten at quickly, from 30 to 75 per cent or more can be cured.

In talking things over with 231 cancer-bearing patients, the consultants found that 67 per cent were glad to know what was wrong with them. Some said that since knowing the worst, they felt better and had less fear. What upset many was being sent to a hospital for treatment that was obviously that for can-

District Judge Fines Happy Camp Resident

Elmer David Ince, 46, of Happy Camp, Calif., was fined $50 and received a six-months suspended sentence in district court Friday for disorderly conduct. He pleaded guilty.

Ince was arrested by a sheriff's deputy in Prospect Thursday afternoon after a Prospect woman complained that Ince had tried to entice her minor daughter into his room.
