GI Education Bill Approved

Washington–(UPI)–The Senate has approved a "GI Bill of Rights" for peacetime veterans after modifying it to provide incentives for college students, who maintain good grades.

The vote was 57 to 31.

In effect, the bill would allow college students in the top-half of their class to continue their college careers on government grants.

Students whose grades fall below the top-half could continue their studies on government loans. The loans could then be forgiven if the scholarship ranking was regained after a year.

In addition, the bill would provide:

–A program of vocational training and rehabilitation for veterans with disability incurred as consequence of military service.

–A program of guarantee and loans to aid in the purchase of homes, farms and farm equipment.

Man Attempting To Kidnap Wife Dies

Los Angeles–(UPI)–A man attempting to kidnap his estranged wife at knife point died of an apparent heart attack while struggling with her, the coroner's office reported Tuesday.

Ronald S. Richard, 38, went to his wife's nearby Norwalk home Monday, pulled a five-inch hunting knife and forced her to get in his car, said Mrs. Rickard, 42. When he stopped at a filling station, she jumped out and he started to chase her but suddenly collapsed and died.

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

May S.–I want to move him away from his father.

John S.–You can't run away from trouble.

* * *

May S. – I have the most awful problem a woman was ever confronted with.

I made a crazy marriage at 17 and had a son a year later. By the time the boy was born my husband and I had split up. I later learned that my husband had been a homosexual for years. My second marriage is happy and I have two other children, but I am worried about my first boy, Stan. He is now 12 years old and I am afraid he'll soon begin to ask questions. He loves his stepfather, but he also loves and looks up to his father. In fact, he even wants to go to the same schools and follow the same career as his father.

I want to move to a different part of the country to take Stan away from his father's influence. My husband says he can't uproot himself at this time. But can anything be more important than saving the boy?

* * *

John S. – I keep telling May you can't run away from trouble. What's going to be is going to be, regardless of where we live or what we do. If the boy has tendencies in that direction, moving won't help. If he hasn't, his father's influence won't hurt him.

It's true that it will probably be a shock to Stan to learn what the score is. But he will have to learn someday, somehow. Even if we live far away, he'll want to get to see his father sometimes. You can't hide things forever.

May is making a nervous wreck of herself about this thing. She keeps asking whether or not I think that certain gestures of Stan's aren't sissified. Well, you just can't tell about a kid that age. He'll change a lot in the next two years. But anyway, May has to learn to accept the worst – if it happens.

* * *

The Council: May and John should make it their business to learn more about homosexuality. And they should get it straight from a psychiatrist, not from casual opinion or their own idle speculation.

The best medical evidence available today indicates that the need or desire to practice homosexuality as an adult is not inborn and not inherited. Psychiatrists find that the homosexual impulse may be curbed or encouraged, according to various factors in the environment.

The basic factor in producing an emotionally healthy and mature individual, who seeks fulfillment with a mate of the opposite sex, is the right kind of parental love. The right kind of love does not involve gnawing fear that has gripped May or the "what-will-be-will-be" attitude that John advances. Children certainly can be influenced and guided toward a better life, but not by parents acting out of hysteria.

In this case, we cannot tell whether Stan's father's influence is harmful, but May should discuss this with a competent doctor. If the father is not an obvious homosexual or a propagandizing homosexual and if he is a fairly responsible person, contacts between him and the boy may be harmless. The fact that the boy now loves him indicates that the relationship so far has been good.

Our guess is that May's worry, her search for "tendencies" and "sissified gestures" are doing far, far more harm than contact with the father. It is unlikely that this boy will "ask questions" about his father's sex life and he should be told nothing about it. If he should learn through an outside source, he should be helped to accept it as an emotional difficulty of his father's which need not concern him any more than some acquired physical handicap of his father's.
