

Mansfield Asks Investigation of Viet Nam Waste

Washington - (UPI) - Senate Democratic Whip Mike Mansfield has called for an immediate State Department investigation of charges of waste in the foreign aid program in Viet Nam.

The Montana senator wrote Acting Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon calling attention to the first of a series of articles on the program by Albert M. Colegrove of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

Serious Proportions

Mansfield told Dillon that "the suggestion of maladministration which is contained in this article is of such serious proportions that I am convinced that an immediate exploration of the situation is necessary."

He said that if the rest of the articles sustain "the serious allegations contained in the first," he will urge Chairman J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) to launch a full-scale investigation by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Disturbed by Charges
Mansfield said he was particularly disturbed by the following charges in the articles:

"What may be excessive pay and emoluments for officers of the (aid) program in Saigon . . . coupled with a supercilious, virtually 19th century mode of existence which can only dismay the Vietnamese people."

"Reported loss of adequate control over U. S. funds used in the program."
"That adverse political consequences in the country may result from 'failure to administer this program in an effective and constructively oriented fashion.'"

PUSHED BY LIGHT—Lockheed Aircraft artist's conception shows space vehicle (at right) being propelled through outer space by a low-density, low-thrust beam of ions, slightly more than a beam of light. Power is supplied by atomic reactor at left, separated from vehicle by a mile to protect passengers from radiation. Because of lack of gravity or air resistance in outer space, very little power will be needed to propel a rocket, once it is lifted out of the earth's gravity field by more conventional means. Such power can be supplied by a mere beam of ions, or even light rays.

Steel Supervisors Prisoners By Own Choice During Strike

Aliquippa, Pa. - (UPI) - Rudolph Vogel, a Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. employee, is a "prisoner by choice" in the mill at which he has worked since 1937.

He is one of about 500 supervisory personnel who have stayed in the big plant here since Tuesday, a day before the nationwide strike began. They have the alternative of remaining in the mill or going out and being refused re-entrance by pickets of the United Steelworkers Union.

Most of the men have chosen to stay in the plant to maintain blast furnaces and other equipment during the length of the strike. J&L has begun court action to guarantee "prisoners" here and at two other mills free access to their jobs.

Vogel, a machine shop foreman, told United Press International by telephone that he has only one gripe about remaining in the mill for the past seven days.

"There's nothing more dreary to an old-time steel man than an idle mill at night," he said, "and you feel it all the more when you have to remain here."

The steel veteran added, however, that it is "not too tough on us old-timers."

"We've gone through this before—I guess you can say we're used to it. But the younger fellas, those guys that never did it before . . . some of them are taking it pretty rough," he said. "Especially those with small kids."

"But even some of the old-timers are nervous. I guess it's the kind of temperament you have," he said.

Vogel said that the men in the mill range in age "all the way from about 23 to 65."

'Expected to Stay'

The steel foreman, who lives in Aliquippa, said the men expected to stay "when we came to work on Tuesday." They brought along extra clothes.

The men are sleeping on cots in their offices or in their shops, he said. He explained that the steel company has these "on hand all the time for emergencies."

They have been eating their meals in the plant restaurant. Vogel has no gripes about this.

"I can't complain about the food. We can always go to the freezer."

Vogel said the men have "plenty to keep us occupied. There's always something to do."

His wife recalled that when he left home last Tuesday he said, "Well, expect me when you see me."

How does she feel about his not having been home for six days?

"They're just in there and that's it," she said. "When you've been a steelworker's wife for a long time, you learn to expect things like this, and prepare for them."

"Nobody feels very good about the strike," she added. "I have sons and sons-in-law who aren't working at all."

Then she said hesitantly, "we're hoping he'll be out in one or two days."

Control Board Has Six Applicants For Dalles Job

Salem - (UPI) - The Oregon State Board of Control has six applicants for the job of superintendent of the Mid-Columbia home at The Dalles. The former Tuberculosis hospital is being converted to attend geriatrics patients.

The board will interview the candidates at a date to be set later. Two of the applicants are from California, one from Illinois, one from Indiana, one from Wisconsin and one from Oregon. They were not identified, except that Dr. Russell Guiss, acting superintendent of the new Dammasch state hospital was the Oregon applicant. He is also temporary superintendent of the mid-Columbia home.

Holding Two Positions

Attorney General Robert Y. Thornton said recently that Guiss could not sign payrolls for the mid-Columbia home, because he was holding two lucrative positions at one time.

But both Gov. Mark Hatfield and State Treasurer Sig Unander said they couldn't understand Thornton's reasoning because Guiss was not drawing any extra pay for the mid-Columbia job.

The third member of the board, Secretary of State Howell Appling, was not present. He was at Nyssa to greet the entrance of the On-to-Oregon wagon train.

The board will meet Thursday at 2 p.m. to decide if Guiss should sign the mid-Columbia payroll despite Thornton's opinion.

'Juvenile Hormone' Said Found in Cows

Ithaca, N. Y. - (UPI) - Two Cornell University scientists have discovered that the "juvenile hormone," a chemical which prevents aging in insects, apparently exists in higher forms of life as well. The hormone allows insects to grow in size without maturing.

Prof. Howard A. Schneiderman and Lawrence I. Gilbert, a graduate student, have obtained a chemical from the cow's adrenal cortex which, when administered to insects, has the same effect. The researchers say this is the first substance ever obtained from a higher animal which does affect insect growth.
