Unique Laboratory To Aid Study of Plants, Animals

Washington—(Science Service)—A unique laboratory—probably the only one of its kind in the world—will soon give botanists and zoologists a chance to get together in some interesting research.

They will be able to study plants and animals in environments of the scientists' own choosing. Plans for the new controlled-environment laboratory, being constructed with the help of a $1,500,000 grant from the National Science Foundation here, include some 30 artificially lighted growth rooms. Areas for sterilization, harvesting, photography, as well as equipment and space for nutrient culture work will be provided.

Temperature Controlled

The animal study section will contain rooms with precise control of temperature, humidity, light, noise, air velocity and atmospheric composition and pressure. Closed circuit television viewing of plants and animals will also be possible.

The laboratory, which will be built at the University of Wisconsin, will permit "individual control of a whole range of climatic variables," Dr. Alan Waterman, NSF director, said.

Physiological, ecological, pathological, behavioral and climatological problems can all be studied at the new facility, he pointed out. "The laboratory will be available for use by all qualified investigators, and living facilities will be made available by the University for those who come to use the laboratory for extended periods."

Hawaiians Said To Live Longer Than Mainlanders

New York—(Science Service)—Hawaiians, the newest members in the United States, live longer than their mainland counterparts.

The latest available statistics show that the average life span for males in Hawaii is 67.76 years, or two and one-quarter years longer than men on the U. S. mainland.

Females Live Longer

Female Hawaiians can expect to live just slightly longer than American women. Hawaiian women have a longevity average of 71.29 years, statistics reveal.

The leading causes of death are about the same for Hawaii as for the U. S. Heart disease ranks far ahead as the number one menace.

In the continental U. S., heart and renal diseases cause 54.5 per cent of all deaths. In Hawaii, the same diseases cause one-third of the total number of deaths.

Cancer is the number two menace in Hawaii just as it is on the mainland. This disease is responsible for one-sixth of all deaths in each location, according to figures compiled by the National Health Education Committee, Inc., New York.

Continental Americans appear to have more fatal accidents, however. This is the number three cause of deaths in the U. S., while accidents rank fourth as a cause of death in the islands.

Hawaii's third ranking killer is the U. S.'s fourth, disease of early infancy. Influenza and pneumonia take fifth place in both locations, however.

Policemen Taught Careful Shooting

Oakland, Calif.—(UPI)—A gunman standing in front of several children fires at a policeman. What does the policeman do?

If he works in Oakland, he doesn't fire back since he might hurt the children.

This is typical of the situations presented to rookies attending a police academy course here.

They stand seven feet from a moving picture screen armed with a pistol loaded with wax bullets while colored slides depicting various shooting situations are flashed on the screen. It's up to the recruit to decide instantly whether to fire, run for cover or take other action.

Another aspect of the program is night shooting. Lt. Joseph Lawrence points out that "an officer is apt to do much more shooting at night," so rookies now practice firing at targets 7, 15 and 25 yards away in darkness. To pick out the target at 25 yards, however, they can use a flashlight.
