The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Clinic

Unnecessary Hysterectomies

In a report from the recent meeting of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, in Atlantic City, I was happy to see that the distinguished professor, Dr. TeLinde pointed out that the common error in treating fibroids is to operate and remove the womb when the fibroid wasn't producing any symptoms at all. He is reported to have said, "This is certainly one of the most frequent, unnecessary pelvic operations done today." He is reported to have said, also, that often when a woman is bleeding a little and there is some question as to the possible presence of a cancer, the simple operation of curettage (scraping out the lining of the womb and examining it under a microscope), which would keep her in the hospital for only a day, would be quite adequate.

Dr. Alvarez

Instead, many a surgeon likes to go ahead and perform hysterectomy. I hate to see this operation performed thoughtlessly. Why? Because for months afterward I may have to struggle to help the unfortunate woman with her flushes or her depression or her unhappiness and distress over her loss of sexual feeling or interest, or ever her husband's loss of interest in her. I know that many a woman has a hysterectomy without any distress of any kind afterwards, but this cannot close my mind to the fact that each year scores of women write to me complaining of terrible results that followed an operation that could easily have been avoided. Often I am sure the surgeon would not have operated if he had taken enough of a history to have learned that the woman had always had a tendency to depression, and did not need much of a shock to throw her into a serious mental breakdown. An ovarian enlargement is another matter, and it must always be viewed with suspicion. It is like a lump in the breast. As Dr. TeLinde said, there are all degrees of pelvic surgery from ultra-conservative to ultra-radical. Every gynecologic surgeon has to develop his own philosophy. I like and admire the surgeon whose code it is never to do any surgery on a woman that he would not do on his mother or sister or wife or daughter.

Civil Service Job Open at Camp White

A civil service examination for the position of supervisory gardener is now open at the VA domiciliary at Camp White, according to Enid L. Brown, executive secretary of the board of U. S. civil service examiners at the domiciliary.

Beginning salary for the position is $2.39 per hour. Information including experience requirements is available at the local post office or the board office at Camp White.

A cheap plastic rocket that could be fired daily for weather observations has been tested.
