What Is The Law?

This column is prepared as a public service by the College of Law, Willamette University, Salem, to explain basic legal principles, not to provide legal advice. The reader is cautioned not to apply these cases to his own problems without an attorney's advice, for differing facts may change the outcome.

Innocent Receiver of Stolen Check Is 'Owner'

Brown accepted a $100 check in payment for merchandise. He endorsed the check shortly before it was stolen from him. The thief gave the check to O'Rourke, who knew nothing of the theft; and, learning that O'Rourke has the check, Brown brings an action to recover it. Who legally "owns" the check?

The law will protect O'Rourke. Promissory notes and bills of exchange (such as checks) represent obligations to pay money. If payable to the bearer or properly endorsed (as Brown had done), they are as transferable as money. Ownership is transferred by a mere exchange of the instrument, whether voluntary or involuntary, intentional or unintentional.

Thus, if John steals a promissory note, he becomes its "owner." If his crime is discovered, justice would naturally compell his returning the note to its previous owner. But if he sells the note to Roger, who knows nothing of the theft, Roger may legally exercise the rights of ownership.

Horse Theft Case

Contrast this with the stolen goods in a horse theft case. If Farmer Brown innocently buys a stolen horse from the thief, he has no rights whatever to the horse. Here again, however, the transfer of possession from the real owner to Farmer Brown was involuntary and without the consent of the owner.

The usual method of transferring title to goods is by a voluntary delivery coupled with an intention to make the receiver the owner. Thus, unlike the check or note, the horse never became the property of the thief and he could not legally transfer the ownership to an innocent third party.

Bills and notes, then, differ from other kinds of transferable property because "ownership" may be transferred by mere delivery or even by involuntary change of possession. The fact that they are negotiable instruments makes them extremely practical in the business world.

Population Clock Records U.S. Birth Every 7½ Seconds

Washington (UPI)—By every tick of the clock, the population of the United States is increasing.

Chances are that the increase stems from the birth of a baby. One is born every 7½ seconds, on the average.

But also swelling our national population, though less rapidly, is the arrival of people from foreign countries who have decided to make a new home in America. One immigrant arrives every minute and a half or so.

The famous "population clock" of the U.S. Census Bureau, a device that has been seen by millions of Americans, records all the changes in papulation – all on the basis of estimated averages, of course.

Many have seen it in Washington in the spacious lobby of the Commerce Department. Likely as not they didn't know about it but caught sight of it as they headed for the Department's aquarium – one of the capital's popular sights for tourists.

Displayed at Fair

Countless other Americans have seen the population clock when it was on tour. It was prominently displayed at the Chicago World's Fair in 1933, the Texas Centennial Exposition in 1936 and the New York World's Fair in 1939.

The central part of the "clock" is a counting device that looks like the milage meter on the dashboard of a car. Set in three groups of three numerals each, the counting wheels record the growth of the population from minute to minute.

In fact, it can be said the clock records population expansion every 11 seconds. That's how often the population increases by one person, Census Bureau statisticians estimate.

Accordingly, every 11 seconds the right hand wheel rolls one notch, boosting the total by one.

Besides births and immigration, the clock also takes account of population losses by deaths and people leaving the country.

It registers all four kinds of population items with flashing lights, one color for each kind of statistic. Blue bulbs flash every 7½ seconds, denoting births. Purple ones flash every 20 seconds, symbolizing that someone has died.

Bulbs Light Up

Every 20 minutes red bulbs light up, indicating that someone has emigrated to another country. Green bulbs wink on every 90 seconds, reporting that someone has arrived on these shores.

An explanatory note on the apparatus points out that "the flash of a light does not necessarily coincide with the exact moment of a birth, a death, the entry of an immigrant or the departure of an emigrant, but symbolizes the effect of such an event on the net increase in the nation's population."

Census Bureau technicians who compute the vital statistics that are fed into the clock are proud of its accuracy. Relying on a 1950 check, they claim the clock is 99.9 per cent accurate. When the census on April 1, 1950 showed an actual population of 150,697,361 the clock was off by only 133,000.

Now 33 years old, the clock was developed by Census Bureau technicians in 1926. Then, the population was 117,399,000 and growing by one person every 20 seconds.

Inside dope: the population clock is shut down every evening and on weekends to save wear and tear and electricity. An electrician starts it in the morning, resetting it to make up for the people it "lost" during the night.

Rust Turned Into Useful Products

Keasbey, N. J. –(UPI)– While U. S. industry is spending billions of dollars fighting rust, one company is actually manufacturing the stuff and turning it into useful products.

The firm is the General Ceramics Corp. Its main products are "ferrites," whose principal ingredient is iron oxide, better known as rust. Ferrites are magnetic materials widely used in television sets, radios, computers, radar equipment and other electronic devices.

General Ceramics manufactures its ferrites by purchasing scrap iron from iron and steel mills, dissolving it in acid, heating it, washing away the impurities and then pulverizing it.

Recently, the firm came up with a new ferrite called Q-3 which it hails as a long step forward in the search for a television antenna that can be installed inside the cabinet of the receiver.

Indian Encampment Ends in Pendleton

Pendleton – (UPI) – The National Indian encampment ended Sunday with the Yakima tribe of Washington taking the all-around championship award.

The Yakimas had the most points in competitive dances and games, night ceremonial pageants and dances and museum exhibits at the nine-day event.

The Umatilla tribe of Oregon gained the grand trophy for tribal pageants and presentations during the evening shows and the Paiutes of Pyramid Lake Reservation in Nevada won the trophy for individual tribes based on conduct, camp cleanliness and promptness.

Joseph Garry, 49, Plummer, Idaho, named the outstanding Indian in North America at the encampment, received an award from William T. Piper, president of Piper Aircraft Corp. Piper flew here from Lock Haven, Pa., to present the special Piper award Sunday. Earlier Garry was honored with a plaque from Gov. Mark Hatfield of Oregon.
