The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Wife Beaters

Today, the police will arrest a man who is beating his wife, but usually all this means is that he goes back and gives her an extra-good beating for having reported him. To lock the man up in jail when he is working does little good because that leaves the wife and children without support.

Often, I'm very sorry when I know of no good advice to give a woman whose husband is psychotic and raising Cain. As I said, Society hasn't yet tackled this common problem intelligently. I hope that some day something I say will influence some legislators to arrange for the custody of mentally-ill and anti-social people rather than for their punishment. The idea that our legislators don't seem to be able to get it, in many cases, they should put a man away, perhaps for life (in a comfortable place), just to protect both him and society from the great harm that he can do, and is likely to keep on doing.

Getting Letters

I am constantly getting letters from people who say that someone in the family is almost insane and is almost certain, soon, to commit a horrible crime, but the police say they can't do anything until the man or the boy commits the crime. Then, they can arrest him and punish him. The idea of putting him in jail before he kills someone, or strangles a poor little girl, or rapes a woman, is practically non-existent in our society.

The other day I read in a paper the statement by a chief-of-police to the effect that he can't do anything with psychopathic delinquents because there is no room for them either in the jail or in the mental hospital, and the legislature won't order the building of a bigger jail or a bigger hospital.

I have received letters from chiefs-of-police and judges who have told me the same thing. Every so often in this column I quote from the newspaper articles I read to the effect that a little girl or boy was brutally killed by a maniac, who, the week before, was paroled from a hospital or prison because they didn't have room for him. This doesn't seem logical, does it?

Cattle Bloat Said To Be Inherited

Corvallis — Indigestion is an inherited tendency, at least in beef cattle, reports an Oregon State college livestock researcher.

Studies just completed by Dr. Ralph Bogart throw new light on chronic bloating that stunts growth or causes death of beef cattle.

Build-up of gas during feed digestion in the rumen — the large storage reservoir in a network of four stomachs in cattle — appears to be a "family" trait, Bogart concludes from records of 250 OSC beef calves.

Chronic bloat showed up in 7 out of 13 offspring of "bloater" bulls mated to "bloater" cows or to cows closely related to the bulls. Less than 4 per cent in the regular breeding herd were bloaters.

Bloat occurs most frequently when animals are on high-quality feed such as good alfalfa hay supplemented with barley. Test animals received a pelleted ration of two parts half-inch cut alfalfa hay to one part grain mix.

Since tendency to selective breeding through selective breeding, Dr. Bogart believes it may be possible in time to pin down the genetic makeup for bloating and thus help cattle breeders select against this abnormality.

Nickel plating was developed commercially in 1870.
