Russia Capable of Supplying World
With Live Vaccine

Washington (Science Service)—Russia is capable of making enough live virus polio vaccine to supply the world, and would probably be only too glad to do so, the developer of one of the vaccines told Science Service.

Drug companies here should get on the job and make the vaccine so it will be on hand, even though the Public Health Service now refuses to issue a license releasing the vaccine for general use in this country, Dr. Albert Sabin of the University of Cincinnati said.

If and when the PHS should license the Sabin vaccine, it would be the first license issued by that Government agency on the basis of Russian tests and data, the scientist pointed out.

On July 15, all inoculations with the oral vaccine will be halted in Russia. At that time, 6,374,000 persons in the U.S.S.R. will have received the vaccine, which can be manufactured at one one-hundredth of the cost of the Salk vaccine.

Advisory Committee
A special advisory committee to the National Foundation recently decided not to recommend the Sabin live virus vaccine for general use in this country at this time.

The questions raised by the PHS and the Foundation concerning the safety of the vaccine can be answered by the field trials being carried on in Russia and Czechoslovakia now, Dr. Sabin said in a private interview. The questions will not be answered by further tests in monkeys or other laboratory procedures, he emphasized.

The Foundation assured Dr. Sabin that a group of American scientists would be sent to those countries to inspect for themselves the methods by which the Russian tests were carried out. The Russian scientists, visiting the U. S. for the recent week-long live virus polio conference, expressed a willingness to have the American group visit the Soviet labs and inspect their production and testing techniques.

Dr. Sabin testified before a Government operations subcommittee on the future of international medical research, chaired by Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, (D) of Minnesota.

Wisconsin produces about 20 per cent of the U. S. supply of evaporated milk. In one year it produced 40 per cent.
