Frozen Fish Dishes Studied

Corvallis - New precooked and frozen fish dishes may appear on Oregon tables and open new markets for flavorful ocean rockfish as a result of studies underway at the Oregon State College Seafoods Laboratory at Astoria. One of the new recipes, a precooked "all fish" loaf, developed by the Seafoods Laboratory, is a blend of delicately flavored fish, eggs and seasonings, ready-to-eat after 30 minutes warming. Flavor tests are being conducted on the loaf to learn how it keeps after a year's frozen storage. Food technologists are also investigating a gelatin-type fish loaf that could be sliced and served cold, and a poached precooked frozen fish served with a sauce. A rockfish "sausage" for relish trays or as an hors d'oeuvre also looks promising, says E. W. Harvey, food technologist who heads up the project. New Markets New markets for Oregon rockfish and an expanded consumer education program on rockfish cookery are desperately needed by the seafoods industry, Harvey says. More than 45 species of rockfish are available off the West Coast with lots of room for further product development. "Rockfish" are any number of closely related light-meated fish, commonly called red cod, blue perch, red snapper, or ocean perch, that feed off the ocean bottom. Easterners relish ocean perch, which closely resembles the West's rockfish, but Oregonians have not yet found an appetite for it, Harvey continues. High in protein and minerals, rockfish are available year around as Pacific Ocean perch, red snapper and rock cod. OSC consumer marketing specialists say that rockfish are among the lowest priced fish offered on local markets.

Chapter Makes Plans for Fall

Rogue Valley chapter of the Women's Association of Allied Beverage Industries made plans for the fall season at a meeting of the chapter August 5 at the home of Mrs. John Bennett on Rogue River near Gold Hill. Preceding the business meeting a buffet luncheon was served by Mrs. Bennett. The luncheon also honored the birthday of Mrs. John Rector, a member of the chapter. Introduced at the meeting were several new members of the chapter from Medford and Grants Pass. Ancient Pipe Dream The first blowpipe - a long hollow metal tube with a bell-shaped end - for blowing glass was invented about 300 B.C.
