

SUCCUMBING to cerebral hemorrhage, Edgar A. Guest, 77, noted poet, is dead at home in Detroit.

Family Council

Mary E.—I'm afraid of marriage for his sake.
Bill G.—How could I be hurt by it?

Mary E.—I am 37, the mother of two children by two separate bad marriages, and now I have a suitor five years my junior.

Bill is good looking, kind, makes a good living and loves my children. The only thing I can find wrong with him is that he must be crazy to want me—an older woman with young children and a history of failures.

Five years ago I promised myself never to marry again and I have devoted myself to my children. I started my own small business, which I hope will insure the future for us. I'm not looking for financial security and I'm afraid of making a mistake that might hurt Bill. He's too nice to get burned as I was.

Bill G.—I have known Mary for four years and I didn't ask her to marry me until I was sure of what I wanted. My friends, my family all advise me against it, telling me she's too old and must be difficult to live with or else she wouldn't have had two broken marriages.

In spite of this, in the time I have known her I have found her a wonderful, congenial woman, full of kindness and understanding. She is a marvelous mother to her children and I would want her to be a mother to any child of mine. To me she looks very young and attractive.

I don't see how I could be hurt by such a marriage. I'd like to make her happy. Her ex-husbands must have been jerks.

The Council: Here is a vivid example of how love, devotion and a strenuous effort can reap unexpected rewards.

According to the picture given here, Mary has changed very much in the past five years. Her love for her children and desire to create a better life for them were the motivating forces that helped her reconstruct her own personality.

Because Mary did not brood about her past or look for someone else to help her out of her troubles, she became the strong, kindly, vital woman to whom Bill is so attracted.

Bill shows himself to be an equally strong, kind and vital person. Although he has listened to his friends and family and taken plenty of time to make his decision, he is sure enough of his judgment and feeling to take on whatever risks or responsibilities may be involved in this marriage.

From the evidence given, we don't think that any obscure forces are menacing this relationship. We would bet on the success of a marriage between Mary and Bill much more readily than on many that might appear smoother on the surface.

Phone Ordinance Officially Dead

The proposed Medford ordinance prohibiting uninvited telephone solicitations is officially "dead."

It succumbed at last Thursday night's city council meeting, when the councilmen were formally informed of Mayor John W. Snider's veto and took no action to override it.

The council had passed the ordinance July 16 but Mayor Snider stated that among other things it raised "serious questions of constitutionality."
