Troop Launching Of Atlas Near

Cape Canaveral, Fla.—UPI—The way appeared clear today for the first attempt at a troop launching of an operational model of the Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile.

A prototype of the combat-type Atlas, the nation's first ICBM, roared off on a 5,000-mile flight Tuesday and the Air Force said preliminary data indicated the missile "apparently achieved most of its test objectives."

Usually reliable sources said prior to the firing that if the test was successful, Air Force troops at Vandenberg Air Force base, Calif., would attempt to fire an Atlas next month. Vandenberg is the first operational ICBM launching site.

Oregon Laws on Moving Explosives Far From Uniform

Eugene — (UPI) — Local laws regulating the movement of explosives are far from uniform in Oregon and some cities have no such ordinances at all, a spokesman for the League of Oregon Cities said Wednesday.

In the wake of last week's truck explosion in Roseburg, which killed 12 persons and caused an estimated $10 million worth of property damage, the League said it usually takes such a disaster to provoke a town into adopting regulations.

It said that Portland and Baker have excellent ordinances "and that a number of others including Eugene, Springfield, The Dalles and Hood River, have adopted the fire prevention code of the National Board of Underwriters containing a strict section governing the transportation and storage of dangerous materials.

ICC Has Rules
Some other communities, the League spokesman said, exercise some control over the situation with parking laws and regulations of truck traffic within the city limits.

In addition to local ordinances, the Interstate Commerce Commission has many regulations covering the transportation of explosives and Chairman Kenneth Tugle has advised Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.) that he believed his agency has jurisdiction in the Roseburg case.

One ICC regulation prohibits the parking of unattended trucks carrying explosives, and a bill pending in Congress would tighten existing rules on interstate carriers.

Cabbie Loses Fare Over Word Mix-up

Buffalo, N.Y.—(UPI)—"Loaded" is a loaded word that cost a woman taxi driver a fare one recent day.

When Buffalo cabbies pick up a passenger, they call headquarters by shortwave radio and say as a matter of routine, "Number so-and-so loaded."

In this particular case, Mrs. Rita Costello's passenger also was loaded. He took offense at her report, she said, made her let him out and staggered away muttering, "You didn't have to tell 'em."
