NEW 'AIR' IN SEWER

Constipation Coming Suddenly at Age 80

An old man writes to say that six months ago suddenly, he became decidedly constipated. It was hard to get a bowel movement. Previously, all his bowels had moved every morning. He wonders if he should now do something about it. Because this symptom is so typically that of cancer of the large bowel or of the outlet of the stomach, the man should have gone immediately to have his stomach and bowel x-rayed, and his rectum looked into with a lighted tube. To wait for six months after such a symptom appears is to invite disaster. Why? Because now, if a cancer is found it is likely to have scattered, and invaded the liver, from which it cannot be removed.

I can sympathize deeply with the man who says that he did not dare go to a doctor because he and his wife are living on small social security payments. Because of the man's great danger and the urgency of his problem, I imagine that the social service woman in any nearby big hospital would arrange to have him x-rayed without charge. If, in his city, there is no agency to help people like this

Farmers Leading Arthritis Victims

New York—(Science Service)—Farmers are almost twice as apt to get arthritis as city dwellers.

One million of the estimated 11,000,000 arthritis sufferers in the United States are farmers or farm laborers, the Arthritis and Rheumatism Foundation here reports. This figure, it said, is far out of proportion to the size of the farm population.

Why farmers are more prone to this crippling disease is not yet known, but several possible reasons have been suggested.

One of these might be the greater amount of time the farmer spends out of doors than the urbanite. A recent National Health Education committee study revealed that, during winter months, there are two arthritis cases among outdoor workers for every one case among indoor workers.

Another reason may be the hard physical labor performed by farmers. Also, physical strain and injury, more apt to occur to a farmer, might "trigger" an attack of arthritis.

Convicts Originate Sit-Down Strike

Little Rock, Ark.—(UPI)—The first sit-down strike in America took place in 1886 at Coal Hill, according to the Arkansas Publicity and Parks commission.

During the early days of the Arkansas penitentiary system, convicts were leased to private contractors in agriculture and industry.

The convicts had to work long hours without pay and were treated harshly. The sit-down strike occurred when a number of them working for a contractor in a coal mine sat down in the tunnels and refused to leave.

The sit-downers erected barricades, killed the car mules for food and fashioned a crude cannon from iron pipe. They loaded the cannon with scrap metal and blasting powder and dared anyone to enter the mine.

After 18 days, the various demands of the sit-down-strikers for better treatment were met, and a subsequent investigation brought the abolishment of the system of leasing prisoners.
