Lady Auto Dealer Heads Firm Rated Among the Top 10

Los Angeles—UPI—Barbara Holt, fit and fortyish, is doing more than well in a man's field.

She is president and owner of two large new car dealerships. One is a domestic brand and the other a Japanese car.

The executive's firm is rated among the top 10 domestic dealerships in this country. She also was the first dealer in the nation to handle the six-passenger Japanese sedan.

"Many persons are surprised to find a woman who heads an auto agency," she said. "I don't see anything so odd about it."

"My husband, Elwyn, was a car dealer and a client of a law firm for which I worked in the San Fernando Valley, where my agencies are. After we were married, I became secretary and treasurer of his agency and later vice president.

"After he died in 1956, I became president."

The versatile grandmother—she has two daughters—is an accomplished horsewoman and was reared on a cattle ranch. She also relaxes by going deer and pheasant hunting in Oregon and playing the violin and organ.

"I have 160 persons working for me," she said. "I make it a point to get away from my desk as often as I can. I talk cars with salesmen and mechanics, and I even sell a few when it doesn't upset the organization or our company."

"Men didn't want me to be a dealer," she said. "They said it wasn't the kind of work a woman should do."

Roast Corn in Foil

Remove husks and silk from fresh corn and soak the ears in cold water with a tablespoon of salt added for each quart of water. Soak only 5 minutes, then drain and wrap the ears in squares of aluminum foil and place in an oven, preheated to 450 degrees. Cook 10 to 15 minutes. Serve with plenty of butter, chili powder, salt and pepper.

Fast cooling after cooking is the way to prevent dark circles around the yolks of hard-cooked eggs. A chemical change takes place inside the egg when it overcooks, or is left to cool in the water in which it cooked. The dark circle is harmless, but it mars the appearance. Cold running water halts the chemical change.

Venerable Vegetable

New York—UPI—Brussels sprouts are a venerable vegetable. The first ones were found growing near Brussels, Belgium, in 1213. But they were not grown commercially in the United States until 1909, when farmers planted them in California's Pedro Valley.

Today, Brussels sprouts are a 50-million pound a year business in this country with California producing 85 per cent of the annual crop. Ninety-six per cent of the crop is frozen for year-round use.

To amuse a baby, give him an egg carton and various small objects. He will find it fun to place them in the different compartments.
