Electronic 'Pool Table' Developed

Schnectady, N. Y. — (Science Service) — An electronic "pool table" has been devised to demonstrate basic analogue computer techniques used by electronic equipment in solving intercept problems for the military. Not intended to duplicate a pool table, the device consists of an ordinary pool table, two balls, two electric eyes, and an analogue computer. One ball is rolled at various angles and velocities across the table. As it passes the electric eyes, information is relayed to the computer. The computer calculates the best intercept time, then releases the second ball to score a hit. It was developed by the General Electric Company here.
