Total Solar Eclipse Due On October 2

Washington—(Science Service)—One of the world's most spectacular heavenly displays, a total eclipse of the sun, will occur at sunrise on Oct. 2 in the eastern United States.

Only those lucky enough to live in or travel to a narrow belt of eastern Massachusetts that includes Boston or southern New Hampshire will be able to see the total phase, weather permitting. Millions in the eastern U. S., however, will be able to view a partial eclipse, if clouds do not interfere.

Wholly Covered

The sun will be wholly covered by the moon for watchers in a narrow strip extending from Massachusetts across the Atlantic Ocean to the Canary Islands, then through the Sahara Desert, the Sudan and Ethiopia, ending in the Indian Ocean. The eclipse occurs at 5:30 a.m. EST in the Boston area.

Outside this ribbon observers will see the sun partially eclipsed over a vast area reaching from Greenland to the southern part of Africa, and from Michigan to Moscow.

Studies Hindered

Over the eastern United States, the sun will already be blotted out when it rises. In New York, for instance, the partial eclipse ends about an hour after sunrise, while in Ann Arbor, Mich., it is finished only 16 minutes after sunrise.

Because the sun will be so low on the horizon from the Boston area during the total phase, scientific studies will be hindered by the extreme thickness of the atmosphere through which the eclipse must be viewed. Much more suitable observations can be made from the Canary Islands, a Spanish possession near the coast of northwest Africa.

Youngest Astronomer

Conducting eclipse studies there will be teams of scientists from Sacramento Peak Observatory, Sunspot, N. M., the High Altitude Observatory, Boulder, Colo., the University of Minnesota, the University of Wisconsin, the National Bureau of Standards Boulder Laboratories and the Naval Research Laboratory. Youngest astronomer on these teams will be Tim Wynyard, a 17-year-old school boy of Madison, Wis., who has been sponsored by the National Academy of Sciences as junior member of an observing team.

A total solar eclipse occurs when the moon comes between the sun and the earth, blotting out the sun's light for a brief time for those in a narrow path on the earth's surface.

Peoria Student Gets Soviet Data

Peoria, Ill.—(UPI)—A Peoria high school junior received a letter from the Kremlin in reply to his request for information on Russian earth satellites.

The youth, James Allenspach, got a packet containing two pamphlets about Sputniks I and II along with the letter. The letter, signed by N. P. Slovokhopya, scientific collaborator of the Astronomical Council, U.S.S.R. Academy of Science, expressed regret that a booklet dealing with Sputnik III was not yet available. Only one thing troubled James. The letter was in English, all right. But the pamphlets were in Russian.

Russians Develop Ultrasonic Plan To Find Sea Fish

Washington—(Science Service)—Russian scientists have developed an ultrasonic method for locating schools of fish from a helicopter. It has proved to be far faster and more accurate than visual or acoustic methods using shipboard instruments.

To locate herring, anchovies, and the larger tunny or horse mackerel, the helicopter hovers about 50 feet above the water. A sound projector, or microphone, is lowered into the water on a wire.
