

German Troubles, Reunification Discussed in Bonn

During their meeting, the joint communique said, "the President and the Chancellor discussed disarmament, the problems of Berlin and German reunification, European integration, and the continued cooperation of the two countries in the Atlantic alliance."

The communique said they "reaffirmed their resolve to continue their efforts to achieve a just and peaceful solution of the problem of the tragic division of Germany, a solution consistent with the desire of the German people and assuring peace and security in Europe."

"In this context," it said, "President Eisenhower referred once again to the pledge given by the United States and its allies to protect the freedom and welfare of the people of Berlin."

Crowd Cheers President
A huge crowd was milling in the streets leading from the chancellery to the helicopter pad on a football field. The crowd waved hundreds of paper flags, threw flowers and chanted, "Ike, Ike, Ike" in a swelling roar.

At his press conference, Eisenhower expressed optimism about the results of his exchange of visits with Khrushchev.

The President added that both he and Adenauer hoped "something good" would come out of his meeting with the Soviet leader.

Eisenhower said the promise, or assurance, of progress for a summit meeting would come from another meeting of the foreign ministers.

Overwhelming Ovation
Eisenhower addressed a precedent-breaking news conference in the West German Foreign Ministry here after another overwhelming ovation from tens of thousands of Germans and a first round of cold war talks with the 83-year-old chancellor.

It was the first time he ever had held a news conference abroad as President.

Asked whether he believed his forthcoming meetings with Khrushchev would help break the ice jam of the cold war, Eisenhower said he did believe so. Eisenhower said he could not believe any world leaders today were "stupid enough" to want a general war.

He indirectly suggested that Khrushchev, from the enthusiastic welcome given the American President here, might get the idea that the German people were, in effect, stating their firm belief "in human dignity and individual freedom."

'Almost Overpowering'
Eisenhower termed his welcome by the West Germans "almost overpowering in its intensity and volume."

Thousands of freshly scrubbed school children, freed from classes for the occasion, lined the shady streets of Bad Godesberg and Bonn to cheer the President on an early morning drive in an open-topped car.

He went through an American housing community bound for protocol calls on West Germany's outgoing and incoming presidents.

The President stood with head and shoulders above the top of the limousine waving both hands at the crowds and flashing the famous Eisenhower grin.

Gets Warm Reception
He got a particularly warm reception when he passed slowly through the streets of Plittersdorf, a suburban housing area built in 1951 by the U. S. government for American officials and their families.

Nearly all the 1,035 American men, women and children living in the community were in the streets as he passed.

"It was just like fair day back home," commented one American housewife.

A police official, still wondering at the astonishing reception the President received on his arrival here Wednesday, said Bonn never has known such crowds, not even during its famous annual carnival season. Eisenhower himself was overwhelmed.

Germany Warned
As Eisenhower and Adenauer met, the Soviet press was telling the Russian people of a letter from Khrushchev to Adenauer last week urging him to reconsider a German peace treaty on Soviet terms. It warned him that Germany would be the first victim of a new war.

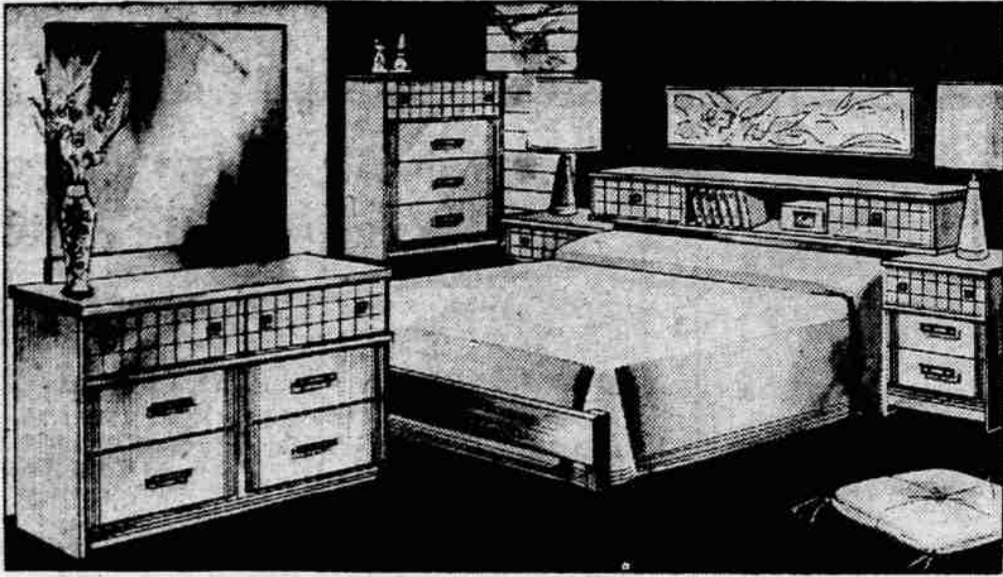

Despite the ominous tones, it held out hope that East and West may be near a historic turning point in policy
