211 pickers are needed to ease a critical picker shortage, especially for Bartlett pears. Pear growers hope to bring more in a little later. It is estimated that the valley camp is 30 per cent short of the pickers needed for harvest work in the orchards.

Conferees To Offer Proposals On Labor Bill

Washington—UPI—House Republican conferees, in a surprise move, reported today that they would offer some new proposals which could head off a Senate floor fight over the labor reform bill.

Rep. Robert F. Griffin (R-Mich.) told newsmen of the development shortly before the joint House-Senate conference committee resumed its efforts to reach a compromise between the House and Senate bills.

Griffin did not disclose immediately his new proposals. He said the conferees agreed to the offers made by the House group. Senate Republicans obviously would abandon their plan to call up a resolution asking the full Senate to break the conference deadlock in favor of the House bill.

GOP Leader Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.) introduced the resolution Friday after the committee had a lock on the House bill curbs on secondary boycotts and organizational picketing and on federal-state jurisdiction in labor disputes. He said he would call up the resolution for action later today.

This appeared to settle any hope that the conferees could agree on a bill beforehand. Over the week end, however, the house conferees came up with some new proposals which apparently would at least partly accept the modifications demanded by Senate Democrats in the House bill.

Student Found After Hiding in Church Attic Nearly Four Years Because of Poor Grades at University

Ann Arbor, Mich. —UPI—"I was a traitor to my friends, my family and my religion. I did not want to go on living, but I was afraid to die."
This was the explanation Chinese student Cheng Guan Lin gave for hiding for nearly four years as a "living dead man" in a church attic next to the University of Michigan campus.

tion proceedings if he is not charged with any crime in Michigan.
Cheng, 28, revealed more of the fantastic story of his self-made prison to authorities who questioned him in the Washtenaw county jail here.

Self-Imposed Torture
"I guess you could call it a self-imposed torture," Cheng said as he nervously flung back his shoulder-length hair. "You know how a kid feels after he has just broken his mother's favorite vase? That's how I feel."
The former university junior engineering student was flushed from the attic of the First Methodist church, one of the city's largest churches, shortly before 6 a.m. Sunday by two policemen.

His capture ended stories about a ghost in the church.

Reports of Prowlers
For the past few years, police have been plagued with prowler reports at the church. Members of the congregation complained of "funny noises" in the big church.
Cheng said he made some noise skipping rope on a 2½ foot wide catwalk of planks in the attic rafters above the ceiling and below the roof of the three-story church.
"I needed exercise," he said. "Even an Oriental like me can't lie on planks 24 hours a day."
He also got exercise climb-

Ashland—Two consecutive sell-outs last week end pushed the attendance total at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival to 31,271, a new high for attendance and the first time it has topped 30,000.

Eisenhower Says Peace Imperative

London—UPI—President Eisenhower said tonight he favors a summit meeting if Russia's Nikita Khrushchev shows that he wants peace as much as the West does.

Eisenhower told British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan during an unprecedented joint television-radio broadcast that his meetings with other western statesmen have disclosed their conviction that peace is imperative.

"If we are to have a summit," Eisenhower said, "Khrushchev must understand that as you and I do."

"In that case," the President said, "we should have a summit—that is, if Khrushchev shows he recognizes that he thinks as we do. Then I think we should have a summit."

Audience Totals Millions
The President and Prime Minister appeared before a television and radio audience of millions in Britain and in other West European countries.

Both wore tuxedos, for they were to attend a formal dinner afterwards.

Eisenhower sat on a couch in one of the state drawing rooms of No. 10 Downing st., official residence of Britain's prime minister, Macmillan sat in a chair beside him.

The joint appearance capped two days of private talks between the two men at Chequers, Macmillan's official country residence.

Eisenhower drove into London from Chequers this morning and visited St. Paul's Cathedral to view a memorial to Americans who died in Britain in World War II. He returned to the U.S. Embassy residence and received the Spanish foreign minister who presented a personal letter from Generalissimo Francisco Franco endorsing the President's present peace mission and asking for more U.S. military and economic help for Spain.

Security and Peace
"We are neighbors in a great society dedicated to peace—in NATO," the President said in his broadcast chat with Macmillan. "In it we all are equal partners. With all our associated countries we are dedicated to one single objective—to making ourselves more secure and peace more promising."

Macmillan replied that that was true, but that "many of our young people fear war."
"The first war happened largely by mistake," Macmillan said. "The second was different. It couldn't be prevented. Now we are in a situation where we might drift into something by mistake."

Eisenhower replied, "Well, Harold, I think there is one thing we may be very sure about. When we were talking about peace we were talking about something now that is imperative in our time."

Must Marshal Intelligence
The President said that war has become so threatening in its ability to destroy whole civilizations, that all peoples and statesmen must marshal their intelligence and efforts to avoid it.

Macmillan's backing, coupled with a previous vote of confidence from West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, placed Eisenhower in a strong position for his talks with Italian and French leaders when he goes to Paris Wednesday.

Ashland Board to Open Bids on New Classroom Building

Ashland—Bids on constructing the Bellview school addition comprising six classrooms and a kitchen are to be opened at a special meeting of the Ashland school board tonight.

Stanley Jobe, school district superintendent, reported that a special metal building comprising two classrooms will be used at the old junior high school this year to compensate for continued closure of the school's top floor as a fire hazard.

This temporary structure, Jobe explained, will become part of the maintenance shop after the new junior high school plant is completed.

Scheduled to Start
Classes in all Ashland schools are slated to begin next Monday, this Friday, Jobe said, a dry run is planned; students will be picked up by buses and taken to their respective schools for registration and short classroom sessions, but no regular classes will be held. The purpose of this, he explained, is to assure effective organization.

Ashland teachers today were to embark on their in-service training program, with faculty meetings in the morning and a general assembly in the afternoon.

Official greetings at the assembly will be extended by Jobe, representatives of the Ashland Chamber of Commerce and Ministerial Association, Mrs. R. C. Stemple, school board chairman, and Mrs. Rodney Merriman, president of the city council of the parent-teacher association.

Dr. Keith Goldhammer from the University of Oregon will serve this week as consultant for in-service training for junior and senior high school teachers. Regular in-service training is to start tomorrow.

Negotiation To Be Attempted, Nehru Declares

Few Frontier Posts Claimed To Be Lost

New Delhi, India—UPI—The Chinese Communists have made new invasions into the Siang and Lohat division of India's Northeast Frontier Agency region, unofficial reports here said today.

The reports gave no details of the alleged new aggression by the Reds into India's border area. They came as Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru said that India would try to solve its border problem with Communist China by negotiation rather than war.

Few Posts Lost
The unofficial reports said a few Indian frontier posts close to the McMahon line is the vaguely defined border between India and its northern neighbors.

There was no official confirmation of these reports, but the Press Trust of India, the Indian news agency, carried a similar report. A Foreign Office spokesman said "we have no information" about the reports.

Meanwhile, more troops were being rushed to the Nefa area to strengthen the border region.

They were reported empowered to shoot if necessary to drive back encroaching Chinese who have clashed with Indian border guards on Indian soil this summer.

Situation Serious
The situation was becoming so serious that even the Indian Communists issued a statement expressing concern over the "unfortunate incidents" on the border. "There cannot be two opinions that the territorial integrity of our country must be safeguarded," it said.

The Dalai Lama, spiritual and temporal ruler of Tibet who is living in exile in India, issued a statement Sunday appealing for a United Nations "verdict" on the Communist Chinese takeover of his homeland.
