

Coast Area Offers Recreation Variety

The following is a condensation of a motorist's report that appeared in The Oregonian, one of an annual series sponsored by The Oregonian and the Oregon State Motor Assn. These travel articles describe vacation trips and vacation spots of particular interest to out-of-state visitors coming to Oregon for the Centennial celebration.

Magical miles of pleasure await the coast motorist from the picturesque resort fishing community of Depoe Bay to the vacationland of Newport. There is deep sea fishing for the sportsman and his family; or perhaps a leisurely ocean excursion along the beauty of Oregon's shoreline to a variety of recreations for the land-lubber.

During our Oregon State Motor Assn. motorlog drive to the central Oregon coast, we stopped at Depoe Bay, where deep sea fishing cruises provide access to the hideouts of salmon, tuna, red snapper and other choice seafood to tickle the palates of the gourmet and satisfy the passion of the fisherman.

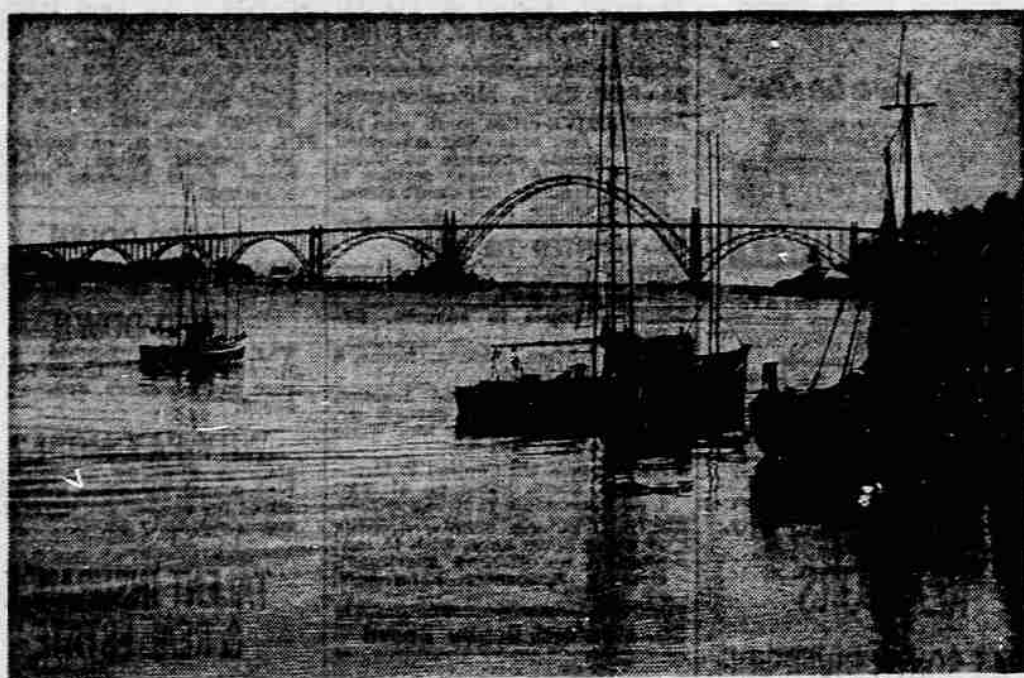

This seaside town is the harbor for one of the coast's finest and most modern of sportfishing fleets.

Salmon Dates Arrive
Fortunately, our journey brought us to Depoe Bay at the birth of the 1959 salmon season. From May through October the handsome Chinook migrates through these waters offering unlimited pleasure to the deep sea angler.

The modern day fishermen still use the techniques of the ancient mariners," explained Capt. Stan Allen of the Trade Winds Kingfisher, which operates out of Depoe Bay. Flocks of birds are a clue to the whereabouts of the salmon. Other methods of searching out the salmon are watching for tide rips. In front of the rip, fishermen watch for debris and smaller fish on which the salmon make their feast, Allen said.

When the angler has located his quarry the next step is to catch him. There are several ways for snatching the salmon from the deep. Some of the more popular methods are trolling, anchoring and mooching. In the former, the vessel travels at 2-3 knots with the lines in the water. Mooching is carried out mainly in bays, tidal areas, and offshore with the use of fresh herring and the long rod.

Another favorite, although not as challenging sport, is bottom

The Yaquina bridge is an important sight to the traveler. It stands some 140 feet above Yaquina Bay, at the entrance to Newport. The bay attracts large numbers of commercial, as well as sports fishermen. Newport also is rich in production of timber. (Walt Dyke photo)

Fishing. The fishing craft travels about a mile off shore to a spot directly over the submerged reefs, some 5 to 10 fathoms deep. Lines are lowered to the reef and the fishermen attempt to attract the fish by jigging, which is working the rod up and down to give the bait the appearance of a shrimp. Some species caught in bottom fishing are lingcod, rock cod, red snapper, sea bass and halibut.

For those who choose the less invigorating pastimes there are innumerable sights just a few miles south of Depoe Bay. According to the Oregon Coast Assn., one of the famous landmarks in the area is the U.S. Coast Guard Yaquina Head light station at Agate Beach. The lighthouse stands some 70 feet above the Pacific in a corridor of constant wind.

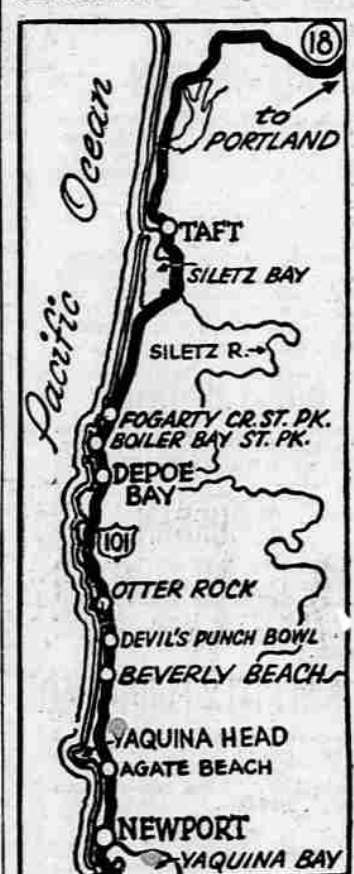

History tells us that confusion intervened in the building of this lighthouse. It seems this structure was to have been placed at Otter Crest, but by mistake, construction materials were delivered at Yaquina Head instead where the old lighthouse was located. This was back in the latter half of the 19th century when all materials shipped to the site had to be delivered by boat owing to the lack of roads. When the error was discovered no one wished to endure the hardship of removing the materials from this rugged, rock bound location. The rest is history. After visiting the lighthouse, which is opened to the public from 1-3 p.m. on weekdays and 1-4 p.m. on Sundays and holidays, the motorist will find a variety of pleasures just five miles south of Agate Beach in the vacationland of Newport.

Newport is a fascinating town and one of the few cities in Oregon whose original site, a mile square, was established as a government townsite. This ocean port became a popular resort when the state was only a few years old. It became a lure to summer weary residents of the mid-Willamette Valley, who began to come by wagons over the crude mountain road, down the winding Yaquina Valley to enjoy the refreshment of the cool Pacific breeze.

Ocean House First
Soon the residents of this tiny community began to lay the plans for developing Newport as a resort. Dr. J. R. Bayley, assisted by Samuel Case, built the Ocean House. It was on the occasion of the Fourth of July, when the Stars and Stripes were raised over the Ocean House, that the name of Newport was adopted. This was in the early 1860s. Another foundation of this resort is the long famous Abbey House built in 1871 by Peter Abbey. The Abbey House still stands in the section of the city

From Taft to Newport the traveler finds more of what has made the Oregon coast a truly great vacationland.

One-Man Crusader On Highway Deaths Ready for Holiday

By EVERETT R. IRWIN
United Press International
Crystal Lake, Ill. (UPI)—A man on a disagreeable mission will mingle with holiday-bent motorists over the Labor Day week end.

James Seymour, 41, an upholder by trade but a traffic safety crusader at heart, will go out searching for slaughter on the highways.

If he finds it, he will record it on film in the hope that his graphic movies in color will "jolt" Americans into waking up.

"We've got to teach people what's going on on our highways," Seymour said as he hammered tacks into a chair in his shop.

40,000 Deaths Predicted

"Forty thousand people, more or less, are going to be killed on the highways this year. But that doesn't start to tell the story."

"When a man's dead, he's dead. But when he or members of his family are crippled for life, there is untold misery, torture and financial hardship. It goes on for months or years and affects all the family." Seymour's mother-in-law was killed in a traffic accident 19 years ago and he couldn't get it out of his mind, he said. Six years ago he began his crusade of cruising the highways on holidays and week ends, watching for a chance to take grim shots of accident scenes.

His car is equipped with cameras ready to shoot through the windshield as he approaches a smashed up automobile. He has two police radio receivers in his car, three in his shop.

"When I get wind of an accident, I'm on my way," he said. "If I'm in my shop, I don't even take time to look up. Often I get to the scene before the police and ambulances arrive."

Roved 175,000 Miles
Since 1953, he's roved over 175,000 miles of highways, seen twisted metal and human bodies at 700 accident sites, counted 135 "fatals" and "more thousands of injured persons than I care to remember."

Seymour said he's shot more than 60,000 good feet of accident film.

His on-the-spot movie was made into a film, "Slaughter on the Highways," which has been viewed by an estimated 75,000 persons from Canada to Florida.

For some of the 300 or more showings, Seymour has received a small fee. Often, he said, he hasn't made expenses.

Financially, I take a royal beating," he said. "I spend part of what I make in the upholstery business to keep my picture-taking going."

Week End Typical

The Labor Day week end, for Seymour, will be typical of his holidays week ends for several years.

"I'll start scouting around Friday night and pull in about 4 a.m. Saturday," he said. "I'll be out again all day Sunday, part of Sunday night, again on Monday."

How does he feel about taking pictures of people who are dead or agonizingly injured?

"I just pray, and concentrate on my footage," he said. "Too many people try to help with well-meaning but poorly placed first aid that should be left to police and ambulance attendants."

"I go on doing a job—trying to take pictures that will bring home the slaughter on the highways."

Hatfield Nominates Judge for Douglas

Salem—UPI—Gov. Mark Hatfield Monday nominated Eldon Caley of Roseburg as Oregon's youngest circuit judge.

Caley, 29, will succeed Judge Robert Davis who resigned the Douglas county position.

Caley, a Democrat, is a 1952 graduate of Willamette university and a 1955 graduate of the Willamette law school. He is a native of Kansas and a member of the Roseburg law firm of Long, Neuner and Dole.

He is a former law clerk of the late Judge James Alger Fee.

Hatfield said he made the appointment outside the Douglas county bar poll because he considered the list of two men as too restrictive. He said he had relied heavily on bar evaluations but had pointed out recommendations would not be tantamount to selection.

Process of Forming Acting Company at Festival Reviewed

Between the "pale cast of thought" and real cast in action lies the careful process by which an acting company is formed each year for the Oregon Shakespearean festival in Ashland.

The process was discussed Monday by Carl Ritchie, festival publicity director, and Auriol Smith, actress in this year's company, at the Jackson County Chamber of Commerce roundtable.

Producing Director Angus Bowmer, Ritchie said, is wont to describe the festival as "the only mail order theatre in the world."

A total of 400 to 500 applications for positions with the company are received through the mail each year, Ritchie explained. These, he said, begin arriving a full year in advance and are received from all parts of the United States and from several foreign countries.

After Application
After the preliminary application blank is returned, he continued, the applicant is sent a letter welcoming him or her interest, a brochure and a form asking more detailed information about experience and abilities.

The brochure outlines the procedure in processing applicants, and includes a few tips, such as: "Elizabethan hair styles require long hair or the appearance of it. Men must wear their hair long, and those who ordinarily wear crewcuts are requested to start letting their hair grow in advance of their arrival in Ashland."

The applicant must name two directors as references, Ritchie said. Each must fill out a multiple-choice questionnaire rating the applicant in such categories as speech (standard British? provincial American?) and attitude (cooperative? dilettante? eccentric?).

Judging Candidates
Ritchie reported that comparing the two directors' ratings, with the wide range provided by the several choices in each category, has proved effective in judging candidates. If the directors vary too greatly in their ratings, he added, they themselves may be subject to scrutiny to determine whose word should have greater weight.

The applicants must also submit photographs of themselves, Ritchie continued. Often, he said, there proves to be quite a difference between a touched-up picture and the too too solid flesh: "We find that the air brushes have been at work."

Bowmer scatters the pictures all over the floor where they may stay for months while he walks about, studying them from all angles, Ritchie revealed. Bowmer makes his recommendations each year in April, he said, and the announcements are mailed out in May.

Company Musters
In June, the company musters for auditions and casting. Each member is given an opportunity to try his hand (and voice) in a variety of roles. Then, Ritchie said, the directors retire for a night-long session to decide who should appear in what roles. This, he added, may involve a certain amount of "horse trading."

The directors avoid any pre-casting, Ritchie said. He explained that they wait until the actors and actresses have shown their abilities during the try-outs before assigning their roles. But this rule like others is best proved by its exception: Bowmer himself last year, Ritchie said, was precast as Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice."

"Ample Chances"
Auriol Smith, taking up the discussion from the company member's viewpoint, agreed the try-outs provide "ample chances" for showing one's abilities.

She said she greatly enjoyed the "all around experience" of acting in a repertory company, with a big role one night and a small one the next.

All she does in "King John," Miss Smith said, is to carry a banner. But, she added, "you learn a tremendous lot carrying that banner."
