Motion Picture Santa Claus Dies

Hollywood—UPI—The cheerful, twinkling little man who meant Santa Claus to so many children will hold no youngsters on his lap this coming Christmas.

Edmund Gwenn, whose role as St. Nick in "The Miracle on 34th St." brought him an Academy award a dozen years ago, died Sunday night at the Motion Picture hospital. He would have been 82 on Sept. 26.

As the movie department store Santa, Gwenn insisted to his employers he was the toy-giving saint of children and his faith in the role brought the spirit of Christmas to an entire city.

Owen made more than 75 films in Hollywood before arthritis forced him into retirement.

The ailing actor entered the Motion Picture hospital two years ago after suffering a stroke. He remained in a wheelchair, spending his days rolling through the hospital corridors to cheer other patients confined to their beds.

The Medical Roundup

Women With Poor Bladder Control

Recently Dr. Thomas L. Ball, of New York, spoke of those many mothers of children who complain that when they cough or sneeze they are likely to pass a few drops of urine—just enough to embarrass them and to irritate. Most of these women are overweight; most have had several children, and most have been torn, during a hard labor. The trouble is due often to a relaxation of what is called the pelvic floor which is made up of muscles. These have been either torn or caused to become relaxed. Occasionally, the trouble follows an operation on the pelvic floor which wasn't entirely satisfactory. Many of the patients would get by better if they did not have a chronic cough which is due, perhaps, to smoking too much, or to a little asthma. Many of these women could probably get by all right if they would only take off 50 pounds of excess weight.

When the condition is very bad, and the woman has never had a repair operation, a good surgeon may be able to help her greatly by bringing the torn pieces of muscle together. He will push the bladder back up into the pelvis where it belongs. In other cases, as Dr. Kegel has been pointing out for years, the woman might strengthen her muscles by contracting them for a while every day on a rubber ball introduced into the vagina. She must keep contracting the muscles as if she were trying to keep her bowels from moving. Dr. Kegel gives these women a rubber balloon connected to a manometer, or measure of pressure. The woman puts the balloon in the vagina and squeezes it with her muscles several times a day. Eventually, the muscles may be developed up to the point where the urine no longer leaks when she laughs or runs upstairs or strains or coughs or sneezes. In the worst cases the surgeon tries to make out of muscle a new valve to hold the urine in.
