Forest Mills, N. Y. — (UPI) — Down in Peru they refer to Alex Olmedo, their greatest tennis star, as "El Mistiano." This is because, as a youngster, he came down from the slopes of Misti mountain, which overlooks the tiny city where the houses are made of the white volcanic ash.

Once upon a time Arequipa passed a law that all of the houses would have to be painted white. Immediately the independent Peruvians began to paint their houses every color of the rainbow. The law was rescinded. Immediately everybody painted his house white.

They say, in Peru, that when a fight breaks out, most people ask "Who's fighting?" but in Arequipa they rush outdoors and ask "Who am I fighting?"

Wants to Win
Which, in a way, explains the inner workings of "El Mistiano," the embattled son of the Incas who currently is bearing the scorn and censure of the tennis world for his "indifferent play."

Alex Olmedo wants to win. But it irritated him beyond words when they started telling him to paint his house white. And, like any native of Arequipa, he isn't going to sit still and ask "who's fighting?"

Of course, in this strange new world into which his tennis racket became a passport, one doesn't go out and throw rocks. So "El Mistiano" simply adopts a go-to-blazes attitude and lets the chips fall where they will.

A year ago he was the hero of U. S. tennis after winning two singles and teaming in the victorious doubles from Australia, 3 to 2. This year, after winning at Wimbledon, he was expected to duplicate his performance in the big silverware snatch.

He Just Shrugs
But, on the heels of a "give-away" defeat which brought official wrath down on his head for acting like an amateur in the U. S. clay court championships, he blew a sin-love.

gles match and the doubles as Australia regained the Davis Cup. There was an evident feeling that he should be stood against a wall and shot.

Alex shrugged and walked away this being far from Misti mountain and Arequipa.

What about his play in the clay courts?

"That he shouldn't have done," says Stanley Singer, on whose recommendation Olmedo was brought to this country.

Alex is unhappy over his showing in the Davis Cup. He looks blue as he shoots for the U. S. title this week. But this is the time, Singer contends, when "El Mistiano" is trying his hardest. And, Singer predicts, the mountain is about to erupt.

Eisenhower Slates Report To People On Europe Mission

Washington — (UPI) — President Eisenhower will make a television report to the American people Thursday night on his successful mission to Europe, the White House announced today.

White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said the President will give his television and radio talk from 3:30 p.m. to 3:45 p.m. (p.s.t.). Hagerty said Eisenhower will discuss "some of the international developments the President and some of the foreign leaders discussed during that trip."

Eisenhower went to Europe to talk with Free World leaders in West Germany, Britain and France in advance of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's visit here next Tuesday.

No Press Conference
Hagerty said that because of the nationwide report, the President will not hold a press conference this week.

WATER LOVER—After swimming in Lake Michigan for an hour, this stray doe escaped from U. S. Coast Guardsmen twice before final capture. Here the doe does a back flip to escape from the arms of Bob Baker. After finally being captured the doe was turned over to the Humane Society of Milwaukee, Wis., for return to woods.

For hundreds of phone people, day starts after darkness falls

Even in the small hours of morning, you know your phone's on the job—just as it is in broad daylight. But did you realize hundreds of people work at night to keep your phone always ready to use?

Telephone operators, of course, are at your call. Inside central offices, testmen check equipment throughout the night. Repairmen are ready to care for the telephone lifelines that tie you to hospitals, police and fire stations and other vital services. Even construction crews can be called out during the night if they're needed.

Every second of every day and night, 365 days and nights a year, telephone people are watching after your service. This round-the-clock service is one more way you get extra value from your telephone.
