Washington Off Guard

by Robert Striar

TO THE Washington, D. C., tourist, it is sometimes difficult to distinguish Capital celebrities from the countless statues lining its malls. Both are dignified, formal—and seemingly inanimate. But over an hors d'oeuvre or gossip tidbit, the stony faces brighten like an old friend's, and their studied grace becomes as gauche as schoolkids at the junior prom. As a Washington society photographer, I'm often nearby at these moments. The pictures I take aren't prettily posed or self-consciously important. They simply prove that people are people regardless of title, dress or surroundings.

Still quite active in politics, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt keeps her hat on while attending Democratic fete.

Dubious expression steals across face of Mamie Eisenhower during luncheon chat with Mrs. Alvin O'Konskie, wife of the Congressman from Wisconsin.
