Fish Biologists Form Organization

A group of fish biologists representing public utilities in Washington, Oregon, California, Wyoming, Idaho and Montana met at Timothy Lake, Ore., Sept. 10-11 to form a new organization, the Association of Power Biologists. The group is dedicated to

"promotion of better understanding between hydroelectric power producers and state and federal fish agencies, as well as conservation organizations," according to Jack Hanel, fish biologist for the California Oregon Power company. It plans to keep members informed on all new developments in fish protection and other processes that will further the compatibility of fish with hydro-electric power.
