Alaska Valley Reveals Secrets

WASHINGTON (Science Service)—How the earth's plant life grew and developed may be revealed in the regrowth of plant life in an Alaskan Valley where a volcanic eruption had destroyed all trace of life. About 50 years ago the Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes was covered completely with debris and hot ashes by one of history's greatest volcanic eruptions. All trace of life was destroyed. An area was thus created that was considered quite comparable to the ancient surface of the earth before the most primitive forms of plant life first appeared.

A report on how plant life started to reassert itself amid the smoking desolation, and how it has developed during the interim years, has just been published by the Smithsonian Institution here.

The Danube river, one of Europe's vital waterways, travels a route of 1,700 miles, draining one-tenth of the entire continent before it empties its great volume into the Black sea.

No point in Kansas rises 500 feet above the average level.

The Medical Roundup

Mongoloid Babies
As many persons have discovered to their sorrow, there is a type of mental retardation in which the child has a somewhat mongoloid look. Many of these children are mentally so retarded that they never can do much. Only those with the higher degrees of intelligence can be taught to do a few useful things. Fortunately, mongoloids are usually good-natured and get along with the family of apparently normal people, and it is particularly in these cases that the parents want to know why such a child was born to them. I have just reviewed much of the literature on the subject, and this, together with my own experience with some of the families, satisfies me that the main cause is a hereditary one.

This does not mean that there usually are some feeble-minded children in the family. This happens, and there are families on record in which there were two or three or even four mongoloids among a sib-ship (group of brothers and sisters). In one of my cases, out of five children born to a couple, the second was a mongoloid and the fourth was an ordinary feeble-minded child. The father was a ne'er-do-well who told me that he thought he had been psychotic all his life.

The reason that, so far, little has been said about heredity is that no one seems to have recorded what actually was wrong with all the members of the family of a mongoloid. So long as there was no other mongoloid known in the clan, the nervous heredity was assumed to be "normal."

All Sorts of Defects
The parents of the last mongoloid boy I saw recently said, at first, that their people were very normal nervous. But when I inquired particularly about parents, grandparents, uncles, aunts, cousins and children, I got a story of all sorts of defects. I found relatives with a cancerous goiter, porriasis of the skin, arthritis, three with congenital heart disease, one with a harelip, three with pernicious anemia (in the mongoloid's mother, his mother's mother, and his sister), and two with Osgood-Schlatter's disease (a hereditary disease of an ankle bone). Certainly this family has a strong tendency to defects.

Desi Arnaz Forfeits Bail on Drunkenness

Hollywood — (UPI) — Actor-producer Desi Arnaz forfeited $21 bail Wednesday rather than appear in Municipal Court on a drunk charge.

Arnaz, 42, Cuban-born husband of comedienne Lucille Ball, was arrested last Sept. 19 as he walked alone on a Hollywood street.

About two-thirds of Arkansas is forest-covered.
