Sparks Fly as Dunes Bill Debated at Eugene Hearing

Eugene—(UPI)—Another in the series of Senate subcommittee hearings into the controversial Oregon Dunes National Seashore bill opened here today, conducted by Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.), author of the measure.

First to testify was Ben H. Thompson, director of recreational planning for the National Park Service.

He said the proposed Dunes seashore area was only one of four remaining in the country suitable for such designation. Thompson said there were no plans for any other national coast parks in Oregon.

Economic Aspects
Dr. J. C. Jensen, professor of geography at Oregon State college, presented a report on economic aspects of development. He said the state could expect three million persons a year to the developed area compared with half that many at present.

Dr. Jensen also said that, assuming a program of intensive recreational development was undertaken, an estimated $26.4 million a year in income could be derived. He said this figure compares with $7.9 million, without intensive development.

Sparks Fly
Sparks flew between Rep. Charles O. Porter (D-Ore.), who attended the hearing as an observer, and Dan Allen of the Governor's Committee on Natural Resources. The committee opposes the plan.

Allen was on the witness stand for more than one hour. When grilled repeatedly by Porter as to Hatfield's stand on the proposal, Allen snapped: "I'm not clairvoyant."

Allen added that if support for the Seashore bill valued the opinions of the governor and of the committee, then they should have consulted them before drawing up the legislation.

J. Herbert Stone of Portland, regional forester for the U.S. Forest Service, said the service currently is studying further development of recreational areas under its jurisdiction and indicated the land would be better kept under Forest Service control rather than under the park service.

Press Group Cites United States for Freedom Violation

San Francisco—(UPI)—A committee of the Inter American Press association today cited the United States and a half-dozen Latin American countries for actions which it said violated or tended to violate freedom of the press.

The committee on Freedom of the Press reported its findings to the general membership of the IAPA after a week-long study which took place before and during the IAPA's 15th annual meeting.

Potential Danger
The committee, headed by Jules Dubois of the Chicago Tribune, also found that establishment of government agencies for importation of newsprint is a "potential danger" to freedom of the press.

This was presumably aimed at Mexico, although that country was not mentioned by name.

In regard to the United States, the committee said: "In the case of the United States, it is resolved that vigorous editorial leadership be recommended in countering the bureaucratic interpretation of the so-called 'executive privilege' and a determined effort made to continue the progress of the people's 'right to know'."

The committee said that the existence in many countries of discrimination in the delivery of official news in favor of newspapers friendly to the government has been proved. It held this to be against the right to the free access to sources of information.

The committee also declared that several newspapers confiscated since Jan. 1 have not been returned to their rightful owners.

The committee was expected to discuss charges of censorship in Cuba under the regime of Premier Fidel Castro. A special committee of the IAPA has reported on one factor of the Cuban situation—whether the Cuban press accepted payments under the Batista regime—to IAPA President Alberto Gains Paz of La Prensa, Buenos Aires.

Russian Power To Be Challenge

Kuibyshev, U.S.S.R.—(UPI)—Sen. Ernest Gruening (D-Alaska) said today the Soviet Union's drive to develop hydroelectric power sources presents a major challenge to the United States.

"It is already apparent that had Russia retained control of Alaska the full development of the Yukon River and the Rampart Dam thereon would be in full swing," Gruening said. "This poses a great challenge to us."

Gruening and Sens. John E. Moss (D-Calif.) and Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.) and a group of American power experts today visited Kuibyshev Dam on the Volga, which ranks as the world's largest.

It produces 2.3 million kilowatts compared with Grand Coulee's 1.9 million kilowatts.

The three senators praised the Kuibyshev project for its apparent efficiency and up to date operation.

"It's a terrific project. We've all been impressed by it," said Muskie.

Moss said "I'm very impressed with it. It is an excellent project, well designed and well built and has one of the finest power houses any of us have seen."

The senators will return to Moscow Thursday for a one-day stay before proceeding to Siberia to view other dams.
