The Medical Roundup
by Walter Alvarez

Familial Periodic Paralysis
There is a very rare disease that runs through some families. The person will suddenly find himself unable to talk or to move his muscles and he may stay this way for hours or for three or four days. Then he recovers. As with most familial and inherited diseases, we physicians know little about the mechanism of the illness, and hence have no treatment for it. We can hardly expect to have any for some time. We first must learn more about the chemistry of nerves and muscles.

What is sad is that the parents or relatives of many of these patients use up all their funds taking the invalid from one doctor and one clinic to another. Usually, I strongly advise against this because, when an able physician in perhaps a large medical center says there is no known treatment for a disease—and particularly an inherited disease—the people had better not go on spending all the family's savings on travel and repeated examinations. I hate to be so pessimistic, but these are the facts.

Lack of Some Gene
Apparently, in the cases of most of these people, there is a lack of some gene (one of the thousands of microscopic elements in our cells that determine what we are), the gene which would make it impossible for the body to carry out a certain very necessary chemical reaction. To show what I mean: in cases of diabetes, hundreds of thousands of tiny cells in the pancreas (digestive gland which lies back of the stomach) fail to develop well and to function properly. Usually, for some years, these glands work well enough, but then they shrivel up and the person is left without the normal chemical mechanism for using sugar. Eventually, the little glands may largely disappear. When I was a young man in medicine, before 1923, all children with diabetes soon wasted away and died. And then that miraculous substance, insulin, was made from the pan-reas of animals, and the children lived and grew up. Now, our chemists are preparing for us one new drug after another such as older diabetics can take by mouth. In the same way, when enough research is done on the chemistry of muscle, we probably will have at our disposal chemical which will enable persons with chronic paralyses of several types to get up out of their beds and to stay well. Any day the discovery will come.

In the meantime, young men and women who know that, in their families, there runs a tendency to hereditary paralyses—when they are thinking of marriage—should do everything they can to find out if the same tendency runs in the family of the person they are thinking of marrying. Then they can know that the chances are that if they have several children, some of them will be paralyzed and will drag out a miserable existence.

As I write this, in comes a woman who is terribly unhappy because three of her five children are not growing up right; one is mentally retarded; one has mild fits and one is incorrigible at home and at school. As she says: "I know my family was full of queer, mentally defective people, but when I married, my beau and his family con-

Two Men Appear In District Court

Wendell William Bateman, 28, of 49 Cedar st., Central Point, appeared in district court Monday following his arrest in connection with the rape early Saturday of a 15-year-old girl.

In other district court action, George Alonzo Warner, 48, of Jacksonville, pleaded guilty to a charge of assault and battery.

Bateman, released on $2,500 bail, was scheduled for a preliminary hearing Oct. 12. Warner was released on $300 bail with his case continued to Wednesday.

In 1807, eight out of ten persons earned their living by farming.
