New York Schools Have Program To Salvage Academic 'Rebels'

New York—(UPI)—For more than a decade, New York City has been carrying out a program designed to salvage the academic "rebels" who blight the classrooms of the nation's largest school system.

The program is based on a network of special so-called "600" schools to which are sent the city's academic misfits—the boys and girls with relatively normal I.Q.'s but with emotional abnormalities ranging from slight to severe.

These anti-academics are against their environment, against rules. They can't adjust to society. They have a short attention span. They blow up at the slightest inclination. They make teaching almost impossible.

Plucked from Classrooms

In New York City, the rebels are plucked from the regular classrooms and assigned to a "600" school. There, they are given a kind of education—and an emotional setting—designed to meet their needs.

The teachers, hand-picked, are seasoned and possessed of "infinite patience," said Dr. John R. Carmody of the school systems Division of Child Welfare. They get an extra $480 a year for teaching in a "600" school, where classes are half as large as elsewhere.

The education dispensed in these schools, Dr. Carmody said, is "heavily weighted" in the direction of shop and vocational training—endeavors in which the pupils have the most chance of succeeding.

"They do not 'graduate' but are kept in school until they are 17, the age at which the law says society no longer must furnish them with an education.

Given Certificate

When the "600" school student turns 17, he or she is given a certificate as proof that this boy or girl who couldn't get along in the main stream, could get along in the "600" setting. It is proof, too, that the child took certain courses and that the former "misfit" has achieved at least a degree of emotional maturity.

Dr. Carmody said the "600" system was begun in 1947 when it became evident that "juvenile delinquency was starting up."

That first year, there were two schools—one for boys and one for girls. The segregated pattern remains, but the number of schools has grown to 24.

"We'll add and subtract schools as the need demands," Dr. Carmody said. "So far, we haven't had a chance to subtract—but maybe someday things will take a turn for the better. Who knows?"

Numbers aside, have the "600" schools helped to check the turmoil in New York City classrooms?

"We believe that they have," said Dr. Carmody. "But you must remember that we can't measure this on a mathematical scale. We can't say that turmoil is absent in regular classes, but we like to think that we are getting at the root of the problem and that we are checking it."

At latest count, New York had 2,700 pupils in its "600" schools. Nine out of ten of them were boys.

Some of the students are assigned to the schools by Children's court. For these ultra-misfits, there are two "600" schools—one for boys and one for girls—called "re-mental centers" where psychological and psychiatric help is also available and where the students must remain 24 hours a day.

Reporting of Drug Admittances Urged

Salem—(UPI)—Attorney General Robert Y. Thornton recommended Tuesday that all narcotics cases admitted to state hospitals be reported to district attorneys.

Tighter control over drug addicts and quicker riddance of narcotics rings would result from this procedure, Thornton said.

A 1959 Oregon law makes it a crime to be an addict, a user or under the influence of narcotic drugs but Thornton said there was no provision for reporting all cases received in state hospitals.

"It is foreseeable that a person having official custody of one who is guilty of the use of narcotics could be charged with harboring a criminal if he failed to report such a person to the district attorney," Thornton warned in a letter to the State Board of Control.

The district attorney under the law has the discretion of deciding whether or not he will prosecute.

Olympia—(UPI)—The Washington State Game Commission declined Monday to soften its non-cooperation with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in the enforcement of federal duck stamps.
