PARENTS SET EXAMPLE
Portland, Ore. (UPI)—Smoking habits of parents determine, to a considerable extent, whether or not their children smoke. So indicates a study by the American Cancer Society covering 21,980 high school students in this area. Some of the findings:
The ratio of smoking is highest among children in families in which both parents smoke; lowest in those in which neither parent smokes. Smoking habit, of boys tend to conform to those of the father; girls follow mother.
