Sun's Magnetic Field Reverses Its Direction

Chicago (Science Service) — The sun has reversed the polarity of its magnetic field. Dr. Harold D. Babcock of Mount Wilson, and Palomar Observatories, Pasadena, Calif., reported here.

Although the sun's magnetic field is very weak, comparable to that of the earth, it can be measured by an instrument known as a solar magnetograph.

Dr. Babcock found that the polarity of the sun's magnetic field was opposite to that of the earth's from 1953 to 1957. About the middle of 1957, the polarity of the magnetic field near the sun's south pole reversed. Reversal of the field near the sun's north pole was not observed until November, 1958.

Polar Field Parallel

Thus, for more than a year, the sun had two poles of the same sign.

At present, Dr. Babcock reported in the current Astrophysical Journal, "the sun's polar field is parallel to that of the earth." Astronomers do not yet understand what great forces within the sun caused the reversal.

Mount Wilson and Palomar Observatories are operated jointly by the California Institute of Technology and the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

The magnetic fields of other stars have been observed to reverse their polarity, sometimes within a period of days, but their fields are much stronger than that of the sun.

Freshmen Scores Show Improved Use of English

Corvallis — English instruction in Oregon high schools has made marked gains in the past six years, the head of the Oregon State college English department believes. He cites comparative test scores by new freshmen to back up his opinion.

Each fall, new OSC freshmen are given an English placement test to help determine for which classes or sections of classes they are best prepared. Dr. Herbert B. Nelson explains.

This year the same placement test was given that was given in 1953. It covered grammatical errors, capitalization, punctuation, and spelling. Improvement was noted in all areas.

Average This Fall Scores this fall averaged from 10 to 15 per cent better than those of six years ago.

In 1953, for example, a score of 111 correct answers would have placed the student in the eighth decile or top 30 per cent. This fall, a score of 111 placed the student in the sixth decile, only slightly above average.

This improvement indicates that the high schools of Oregon are apparently improving their teaching of English fundamentals, Nelson says. Probably, also, the more rigid entrance requirements now in force at OSC may have helped to improve the scores, he added.

Required remedial classes have been eliminated as a result of this marked improvement. Students who need further help now attend two lectures a week in addition to their regular English classes, Nelson reported.

Treasury To Get Centennial Funds

Portland —UP— The Oregon Centennial commission probably will return some $50,000 to the state treasury, according to officers.

Fiscal Officer William Garenstroom told the commission he has taken some $24,000 from the sale of assets at the exposition. He said that additional sales will bring in several thousand dollars more, and $3000 was left in the exposition operating account.

Another $20,000 remains from the 1958 legislative appropriation of $1,790,000. It had been earmarked for fine arts and other budgets.

He said his estimate was based on the supposition that no unforeseen claims will have to be paid, and that current claims will be settled in a favorable way.

Only 43 days after President William McKinley died of a bullet wound, his assassin, Leon F. Czolgosz, was executed in Auburn, N.Y., State Prison on Oct. 29, 1901.
