Sailboat Built of Plastic Latest for Do-It-Yourself

Sausalito, Calif. —(UPI)—The Aeromarine Plastics Corp. has come up with a trickster for the do-it-yourself man who has built everything — a 40 foot, 19,500-pound sailboat.

Even the newcomer to kit construction should not have too much trouble with it, since the boat is all plastic and a minimum of tools is required.

Most necessary item is $9-750 for the molded hull and deck which come separately; or roughly $15,000 for everything including the plumbing, mast and engine.

The money, plus a large backyard and an aggressive attitude, are all that are needed. The kit builder is then master of his fate.

For those who lack all the ingredients but money, Aeromarine will deliver to your nearest ocean lake the completed boat for a mere $27,500.

The only difference in the boats is the name. If completed outside Aeromarine's plant, it is called the Aeromarine 40. If the factory does the job, it is the Bounty II.

Designed by Philip L. Rhodes of New York and the brainchild of builder Frederick M. Coleman, Aeromarine's plastic boat has a popular advantage over conventional craft. There is little maintenance needed.

Whereas most sailors "spend a day working for a day sailing," plastic owners keep their boats shipshape with a bucket of fresh water and a sponge.

One Bounty II owner is Moreland Hogan of New Orleans, who trucks his sloop "Glass Slipper" around as far as it was a dinghy, racing as far away from home as New York and Chicago.

Carting a wooden boat of the same size in the same manner would be next to impossible without constant damage to paint, frames and planking, all of which the Aeromarine boats lack.

Hogan's other boat problems were also solved by "Glass Slipper." Plastics are unaffected either by the extreme Southern heat, which spreads the seams in wooden hulls, or by wood borers, which can eat the bottom out of a conventional boat.

In New York another owner, engineer John Hughes, does not pull his Ensis II out of the water as all other boat owners do during the winter. Since plastic does not warp and ice can't hurt it, he says he just brushes off the snow occasionally.

Ashland Girl Finds Slip Worth $1,000

Ashland — Miss Joy Farenhurst, 15, of 288 Harrison st., Ashland, yesterday found a slip worth $1,000, hidden in a "treasure hunt" contest sponsored by a local radio station and premium stamp firm.

The slip was in a hollow log near the junction of Mud Springs rd. and Coleman Creek rd. Nearly 150 cars were in the vicinity when Miss Farenhurst made the find.

She will be presented with the money on Nov. 10 at a banquet, by Archie Fries, manager of the Ashland branch of the U. S. National bank.

Miss Farenhurst is a sophomore at Ashland High school.

NEVER A BRIDE
Pinner, England —(UPI)—None of the bridesmaids caught the bride's bouquet at a wedding here Sunday. A horse ate it. Air hostess Sallie Aiden, 22, brought her pet horse Chico to her wedding to Bryan Murphy, 22. After the wedding they pinned a rose on Chico and then fed him the rest of the bouquet.

In the past year and a half, 39 Aeromarine boats have been built and are racing and cruising throughout the United States.

But there is another side to the story. Plastic boats are still in the experimental stage and no one knows for sure their limitations.

Coleman claims that because of the unframed molded hulls and decks, his boats have no built-in stress such as exists in wooden boats where planks and frames are bent to fit.

And tests show that the fiberglass-resin combination used in the Aeromarine 40's and the Bounty II's will take more of a certain type of stress than steel.

However, plastic is a rigid material, and whether it can stand the constant strain and pounding a sailboat undergoes only time will tell.
