

Frightened Pilot Locates Wife

Logansport, Ind.—Thomas C. Beardsley of Connersville had a bad scare.
He and his wife climbed into a two seat open cockpit plane and headed for Logansport. When the plane landed, Beardsley discovered his wife wasn't in the aircraft.
The worried husband telephoned Connersville . . . his wife had hopped out of the plane to make a last minute parachute adjustment and he had taken off without her.

West Texas Scene of Asteroid Explosion

Austin, Texas (Science Service) — Sierra Madera, a "de-ranged and jumbled" geological structure in western Texas, has been found by government geologists to be the site where an asteroid from outer space exploded as it struck the earth about 50,000,000 years ago. Geologists visiting McDonald Observatory, jointly operated by the University of Texas here and the University of Chicago, based their conclusions on the abundance of "shatter cones" in the area. These cones are small structures that indicate disruption of rock by an intense shock wave such as can only be caused by meteoritic impact and not by volcanic explosion, they said. The cones were found in greater abundance than in any other similar structure in the world.

Smallest Thermometer Measures Coldest Cold

Murray Hill, N. J. (Science Service) — A thermometer housed in a tiny tube shorter than a common pin can measure temperatures close to absolute zero (minus 459.7 degrees Fahrenheit). Developed by scientists at Bell Telephone Laboratories here, the germanium resistance thermometer may be sent up in space vehicles to help give "weather" reports on outer space. The resistance of the part of a germanium crystal in the "heart" of the thermometer increases rapidly as the temperature falls. To find the temperature an electric current is sent through the thermometer and the resistance afforded by the germanium is measured.

Army Troops Guard Canal Zone Borders

Balboa, Canal Zone — (UPI) — U. S. Army troops equipped with machineguns and mortars guarded the borders of the Canal Zone today against any new invasion attempt by mobs of anti-American nationalists from the Panama Republic.
