BLM to Work on Access to Domain

Portland — Bureau of land management offices throughout the west will take the initiative in working out agreements with private landowners to assure access route for sportsmen and others to large blocks of public domain, the department of interior has announced.

The agreements will be worked out concurrent with a study of present access routes as part of a concerted effort of the BLM to help meet the growing needs of recreation. BLM Director Edward Woolley said.

The Taylor Grazing act, under which the bureau manages some 178 million acres of land in 11 western states, specifically provides that the land will be open to the public for hunting, fishing, camping and other purposes.

In some instances, Woolley said, access to large blocks of public domain has been cut off by surrounding private lands. The extent to which this has happened and recommended solutions will be determined by a survey. Field reports and plans are scheduled for completion by the end of the fiscal year June 30, he said.

Hi-Lites IN THE History OF Pharmacy

by Jim Foster

The Italian Apothecary "Shop" of the Renaissance Period were very often rooms of architectural beauty with equipment that today is highly valued by connoisseurs of Italian art. Beautiful works of art adorned the walls and the finest ceramic art was displayed in jars.

The first school in America to include Pharmacy was the College of Philadelphia in 1789. The name of this school later was changed to the University of Pennsylvania by which name it is still known.
