

BATTLE FOR SURVIVAL—The giant Watutsi tribesmen of Ruana-Urundi are engaged in a battle for survival with the Bahutus, the tribe they have rule as masters for more than 300 years. The medium-sized Bahutus have turned on the Watutsi, many of whom are more than seven feet tall, and

Legend of Watutsi Warriors Dying in Belgian Congo Fight

Editor's note: Robert Musel of the London UPI bureau has spent some time with the Watutsi tribe in Africa, now engaged in a battle of survival with the Bahutus who rose from serfdom to kill hundreds of their giant masters. In the following dispatch he tells of their rise to near god-like status—and their fall.

By ROBERT MUSEL
London—(UPI)—A David and Goliath war is being fought in Ruana-Urundi, next door to the Belgian Congo, and what is dying with the Watutsi warriors is the legend of their invincibility.

The Bahutus, who are a people of medium height, are killing off their masters of 300 years—the giant Watutsi, one of the strangest and most fascinating tribes on earth. I spent some time among them in one of their capital towns, Astrida, where the Watutsi— they prefer that spelling to the Americanized Watutsi—have ruled for three centuries over the cool hills of their beautiful land.

Legend Protects Them
They came down out of Egypt or Ethiopia centuries ago, bringing with them the lyre-horned cattle exactly like those depicted on ancient Egyptian tombs. And their legend of invincibility had protected them ever since.

Without really fighting a battle the skinny giants, many of them seven feet and over, made slaves of the pygmy Batwas (four feet high) and subject peoples of the Bahutus.

They have brought in the pygmies and their blowguns and poisoned darts to aid them in their battle for survival.

The Watutsi are people of tremendous presence. Their faces are delicately chiseled, their swaying walk gracefully impressive. To emphasize their height they wear Romanesque togas draped down from the shoulder.

The Batwas and Bahutus had never seen anything like them. They accepted instant-
