Reds Plan To Increase Their Productivity

What comprehensive automation is planned in the Soviet Union in the next seven years?

Let us begin with particulars. Ten automobile production lines are operating today at the Likhachov Motor Works. In 1965 there will be 170. Many hundreds of automatic lines are to be installed in the country's industries in these seven years. A good many computer and mathematical machines are to be built to control production.

No less than 50 experimental and model plants using the latest schemes of comprehensive automation are to be built in these seven years by decision of the 21st Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

A special state committee has been instituted at the Council of Ministers to set the basic trends of automation and mechanization in all sections of the economy, to work out measures to speed up progress in machine and instrument building, the production of devices for automation and industrial electronics. The committee embraces automation and engineering, for the one cannot exist without the other.

The result of the historical conditions in which the country accumulated its machinery is that its industry is equipped with a diversity of machine types. Machines of different design and specification are used for the same operations. More than 125,000 different machines are being produced today to cover the needs of domestic industry. Yet automation necessitates uniformity. Similar operations must be performed by identical machines. Hence we have to develop an economically efficient series of machines of definite sizes for every branch of production. And these must be economically adequate. Furthermore, we think it worthwhile to develop standard designs for many types of factories.

Automation cuts production expenses very greatly—25 per cent in the power industry, 20 per cent in the metallurgical industry and 10 to 15 per cent in the chemical industry.

Automation means a 25 per cent saving in labor power in the metallurgical industry and 20 per cent in the chemical industry, with a simultaneous 10 to 15 per cent increase in output.

In many spheres automation inevitably leads to a technological revolution. This applies, among others, to the production of TV and radio receivers. No conceivable machine could produce order in the maze of detail that makes up their innards. To automate the assembly of radio sets engineers have abandoned the usual system of wires and replaced them with so-called "printed circuits."

Quotes From the News

By United Press International
Langley Field, Va.—Air Force Capt. Donald K. Slayton, one of the seven U.S. astronauts, expressing confidence that the pilot of America's first space flight will get back even if automatic devices fail.

"It's a misconception that you have to build a system that is perfect automatically before you put a man in space. It's the man aboard that gives you reliability."

Holyoke, Mass.—Mrs. James Walsh, of Chicopee, Mass., who bought a $22.75 counter check and got one for $4,000.027.75 instead, refusing to return the check until the bank reimburses the teller who made the error.

"I'm just stubborn. Everybody makes mistakes."

Havana—Premier Fidel Castro, telling Cuba's two-million-member Labor Confederation (CTC) that their conduct had convinced him it would be unwise to arm and train "workers brigades."

"What would happen at this convention if each of you had a machine gun in his hand?"

Chicago—Robert F. Hurligh, president of the Mutual Broadcasting System, calling for a single program rating service and for a Senate hearing on the impact of ratings on programming.

"This will unearth some of the mumbo-jumbo, the double-talk, the weasel-wording and defensive mee-too tactics that undeniably are some of the causatives for the problems of our industry."
