Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

'Mute' Swans

Mute Many Sounds
We hoped eventually to raise a few cygnets. To do so we had to secure a healthy "pen" and a mature "cob."

Swans are supposed to be mute. It is pretty generally understood that any animal that is "mute" is voiceless. So we believed when we incorporated a pair of "mute swans" on the little lake. The classic beauty of the great white birds, floating gracefully amidst the colorful pond lilies, added much to the gardens—living ornaments of immaculate elegance. They were beautiful with their snow-white elongated bodies, black foreheads, pinkish colored bills and gracefully arched, 23-vertebraed necks, making them about as flexible as a piece of rubber hose, whereby the bird could reach down to the bottom of the pond where plants were growing.

No 'Mutes'
We knew we had "mute swans" but the swans didn't know it. They were not silent. Their voices were capable of many and various sounds. When angry they hissed like escaping steam from a high pressure boiler. They "barked" a peculiar sound, like a small dog with an impediment in its "speech." "Mute," when applied to swans, didn't mean a thing.

When angry they would rare back on their tails, stretch out their wings, attaining a spread of eight feet, and strike savagely. The hard knucklebones of the wings could break a human arm. They were beautiful, but at times, vicious.

"Snowwhite," the "pen," finally made a nest by the side of the little pool. In it she laid five greenish-white eggs, each all of four inches long. While she was incubating, the "cob," just another name for papa-swam, patrolled back and forth by the nest. He had a wonderful "flowing motion" in the water; he moved with no visible means of locomotion. He was ever watchful, for the setting "pen," his wife, would be his mate for life.

'Powder Puffs'
Five weeks of this. Then three fluffy little cygnets were hatched. They were like tiny "powder puffs" with legs. They were no more "mute" than their parents.

They barked and yelped like puppy-dogs. At night they would receive an assist from their mother. She would raise one huge foot, the baby would hop on it, then mount to the broad back, later go to sleep in the hollow, between the mother swan's wing, right in the very center of her back.

Holding one of the babies in one's hand was an enjoyable experience. The feathers felt like fur. We realized then that real "swansdown" was the under plumage of a swan, not a cake flour.

Taking into consideration all the peculiarities and contradictions regarding swans, it's understandable why superstition persists, such as a dying swan sings a beautiful but sad song of remarkable musical power with the "drooping of the final curtain." A Bible produced at Geneva in 1560 was called the Brechee Bible. Genesis 3:7 reads: "And they sewed fig leaves together, and made themselves breeches."

Most states classify a child as delinquent if he violates any public law or ordinance, runs away from home, or if his habitual disobedience is beyond control of his parents.

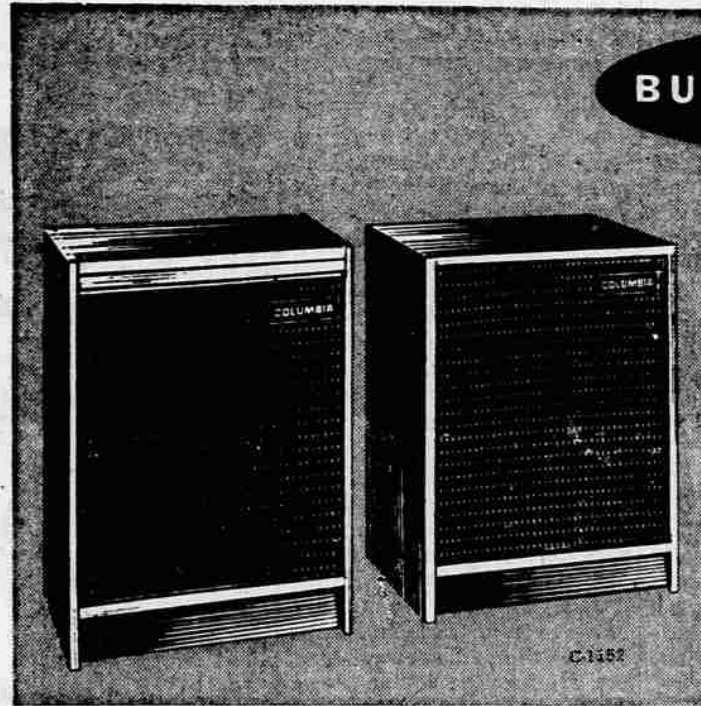

The first pictures of men wearing clothes date back to nearly 20,000 years ago. Lawrence Langer wrote in his book "The Importance of Wearing Clothes."

A single large steel mill may require as much as 500 million gallons of water a day, enough to supply all normal daily requirements of a city of several million people.
