

Physical Ed Topic For School Session Here Tuesday

The physical education and intramural program of Medford public school will be presented to school board members and interested lay people at a meeting in the speech room of Hedrick Junior High school starting at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Dec. 1.

The meeting is one in a series in which the curriculum of the schools is presented.

In addition to the physical education and intramural program, the Medford Growth Study also will be explained. The Medford Growth Study is receiving national recognition as the only study of its kind.

In Fourth Year

The study, now in its fourth year, is a 10-year program financed by outside sources, including the University of Oregon, Southern Oregon college and national physical education and health associations.

Participants in Tuesday's meeting will include Lee Ragsdale, director and supervisor of health and physical education in the Medford schools; Dale Bates, physical education instructor at McLoughlin Junior High; and Miss Patricia Mounts, girls' physical education instructor at Medford High school.

School officials said they have been disappointed in the number of lay people who attend the curriculum meetings, and expressed hope that an increased attendance will be noted.

IT'S WARM HERE — It was a cool, crisp day in New York for Macy's annual Thanksgiving Day parade and pretty drum majorette Judy Greco, 17, of Charleroi, Pa., used the heat from the exhaust pipe of a parked bus to keep warm before the parade began. Judy appeared with the Charleroi High school band.

INCREASE FACULTY PAY

Princeton, N. J. — (UPI) — The Princeton University faculty will get salary increases next school year of from $500 to $1000 a year.

Follow the presentation. The meeting will close no later than 9:30 p.m., school officials stressed.

FIND ANCIENT SHIPS

Rome — (UPI) — The remnants of three ancient Roman ships have been found by workers building a new jet-age airport for Rome. The poorly-preserved ships, each about 130 feet long, were found by excavators at the mouth of the Tiber river.

Effect on Labor-Management Relations Seen in T-H Changes

Editor's note: This is the last of four dispatches by the general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board explaining the new labor reform law. This dispatch deals with votes for economic strikers and so-called hot cargo exemptions.

By STUART ROTHMAN
General Counsel
National
Labor Relations Board

Distributed by UPI

Washington — (UPI) — A far-reaching effect on labor-management relations may result from the new Taft-Hartley amendment which permits employees out on a strike for wages or other economic aims to vote in NLRB representation elections even though other employees have been hired for their jobs.

This right to vote for economic strikers is the fruit of a campaign begun by President Eisenhower in 1953.

Under the law before the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947, replaced economic strikers as well as the employees replacing them were allowed to vote in board elections. The Taft-Hartley law prohibited replaced strikers from voting. Unions had condemned this as a "strike-breaking" provision and President Eisenhower agreed it should be changed.

Congress in the new amendments gave replaced strikers the statutory right to vote. They may vote in any NLRB representation election held within 12 months after the start of the strike. Their right to vote is subject to "such regulations as the board shall find consistent with the purposes and provisions" of the law. Under this, the board may well conclude that strikers who engage in serious misconduct during the strike should still be barred from voting. The law has always permitted an employer to discharge a striker for such misconduct.

Clothing Provision Limited

The other major changes made in the Taft-Hartley Act by new amendments which I have not discussed are:

1. The building industry exemption from the "hot cargo" ban to permit employers and unions in this industry to make agreements restricting "contract or subcontracting of work to be done at the site" of the construction or repair. However, it appears that building trades unions cannot strike to enforce such agreements.

2. The provision permitting the building industry to make agreements which set up union-operated hiring halls and require employees to join the union within seven days after they go to work. This section also legalizes union contracts in this industry made before any employees are hired.

3. The clothing and apparel industry exemption from the "hot cargo" and secondary boycott bans as to contracts governing the subcontracting of work. Under this provision, unions in the clothing industry may make agreements requiring that work contracted out go to firms with which the union has contracts. This exemption, however, is limited to situations where the subcontractor is "working on the goods or premises of the employer or manufacturer or performing parts of an integrated process of production." The clothing unions may strike to enforce such agreements.

Uncertainty Over Exemption

Uncertainty has already arisen over the building trades exemption. After adoption of the law, one of the Senate members of the conference committee of Congress which drafted the new amendments said that this exemption was meant to apply to any work that "could be" done at the construction site. A House member of the conference committee immediately rose to differ, declaring that it applied only to work "actually done" at the site.

These differing interpretations make a big difference as to what kind of agreements unions and employers in the building industry can lawfully make. But from this point, the issue goes to the general counsel, the five-member National Labor Relations Board, and ultimately perhaps to the top federal courts. We now have the ball, and we shall all try to carry it to the goal Congress meant.
