New Vets Pension Law To Become Effective

The new pension law effective next July 1 in no way changes the basic eligibility for a veteran seeking a pension, S. T. Brannock, contact representative, VA Domiciliary, Camp White, said today.

The veteran still must be totally and permanently disabled, not due to his own misconduct, from causes not traceable to his service, must have had 90 days or more of honorable wartime service, and an income below prescribed limits.

Extending the present income limits of $1,400 a year for a single veteran and $2,700 a year for a veteran with wife or child to $1,800 and $3,000 respectively, the new pension law attempts to relate the amount of pension to need, Brannock said.

Receiving Pensions

Veterans with higher income will receive lower pension payments and those with smaller incomes will receive larger pensions when the law becomes effective.

But the basic eligibility requirements for veterans remains unchanged, Brannock reiterated, in contrast to the requirements for veterans' widows and children.

Widows of World War II and Korean conflict veterans under the new law no longer will be required to show that the deceased veteran had a service-connected disability. Like widows of World War I veterans, they will have to show only that the veteran had 90 days or more of honorable wartime service. Widows must also come within the income limitations, Brannock stated.

In the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

Incidental information:

Our moon shot the other day (which left our faces red) is said to have failed because a plastic cover ripped off the payload – the payload, presumably, being the satellite that was supposed to go orbiting around the moon.

Our space scientists report that the cover ripped off 45 seconds after the launching.

THE moral:

LITTLE things are important.

THE importance of little things is dramatized by an ancient maxim whose authorship is lost in the mists of antiquity. It goes like this:

"For lack of a nail, the shoe was lost; for lack of a shoe, the horse was lost; for lack of a horse, the rider was lost." In that form, it was used by Benjamin Franklin in a prefix to his Poor Richard's Almanac.

In an older form, it is put like this: "For lack of a nail, the shoe was lost; for lack of a shoe the horse was lost; for lack of a horse the rider was lost; for lack of the rider, a KINGDOM was lost."

IN THAT form, it goes clear back to England's War of the Roses in which for 30 long and bloody and terrible years England was torn by a dynastic struggle between the House of York, whose emblem was the white rose, and the house of Lancaster, whose emblem was the red rose.

The War of the Roses came to its final end in the battle of Bosworth Field, in which Richard III, the last king of the House of York, performed prodigies of valor, but at the critical moment of the battle, when his presence was needed everywhere, his horse was killed by an arrow.

SHAKESPEARE, in his Richard the Third, tells the story thus:

King Richard: A horse! A horse! My kingdom for a horse.

Catesby: Withdraw, my lord; I'll help you to a horse.

King Richard: Slave! I have set my life upon a cast,

And I will stand the hazard of the die.

I think there be six Richmonds in the field;

Five have I slain today, instead of him –

A horse! A horse! My kingdom for a horse.

AT THIS moment, the Earl of Richmond, a supporter of the House of Lancaster, comes on the scene and they fight and Richmond kills Richard III – and that ends the royal tenure of the House of York.

It wasn't the lack of a nail that finished Richard's horse. But the chance flight of an archer's arrow is a little thing – like the ripping off of the plastic cover of the payload of a rocket fired at the moon.

So –

Watch the little things.

Drive-In Broken Into Here Recently

Someone broke into Edith and Henry's Drive-In, 1132 North Riverside ave., it was discovered recently by city police.

Henry Rudolph Byers, owner of the building, said he had not been in the building since Nov. 20, so it could not be determined at the present time just when the building was entered, police said.

The inside of the building was disarranged, but it could not be determined if anything had been stolen, Byers said. Police said entry appeared to have been made through the rear window and exit was made by the rear door.
