Dishpan Hangover Disappears With Automatic Dishwasher

Does dishpan hangover spoil many of your meals? It does for thousands of American families.

But thousands of others have diagnosed the problem and found a sure "cure" in a modern automatic dishwasher. The symptoms of dishpan hangover are easy to spot. There's that uneasy feeling that comes over you as the dinner dishes are cleared away and dessert makes its appearance.

Or there's that unwillingness to fuss over preparing a meal because you're afraid that you'll "dirty up too many dishes."

An Unhappy Chore

Dishpan hangover can put a cloud over any meal. No matter how glamorous the dessert and no matter how relaxing and attractive the talk over coffee, someone in the family is all too well aware that in a few moments she'll be bent over the sink with her hands plunged in dirty dishwater, facing once again one of living's more persistent and unhappy chores.

"She" may be mother herself, who all too often finds some of the joy of good cooking tempered with the knowledge that in less than an hour she must switch roles from that of glamorous chef to hard-working scullery maid.

Or "she" may be the daughter, son or father of the family, taking his "turn" at a kitchen chore which is so persistent and so unglamorous that it must be passed around from person to person in regular rotation.

Of course, the fact that the whole family sooner or later becomes involved in the kitchen clean-up chores is one reason why a modern dishwasher makes such an appropriate Christmas gift. In working its daily magic and relieving everyone from his or her "turn" at the sink, the dishwasher becomes the best possible "family" gift.

Freedom from drudgery is, obviously, the biggest advantage of owning one of these appliances. But a dishwasher has other points in its favor. Many families who own one save money on hot water and on detergent by doing dishes only one or two times a day.

The breakfast dishes are scraped and placed in the machine where they're out of sight until they're joined by the luncheon dishes. Only then is the dishwasher turned on—but turning it on is literally the only thing the housewife must do with today's modern machines which take over the entire chore from that point onward.

Nor will women overlook the money they can save by cutting down on breakage of dishes done by hand. Sometimes it's an overzealous youngster who's responsible, but more often than not it's the fault of the wet and slippery dishes themselves when a valuable plate slips from your hands and shatters on the kitchen floor.

Fortunately, today's dishwashers put an end to all these problems. And, fortunately, too, you'll be able to find one to fit just your needs. The portables are easily hooked up, yet roll away for easy storage. The built-ins and the free-standing models are ideal where space and plumbing facilities can be employed for permanent installation.

But portable or free-standing, this brand or that, every one of today's dishwashers will do exactly what you most want it to do—provide a sure cure for dishpan hangover.

Homely Sink Now Said Attractive

The once homely sink now comes in an attractive streamlined cabinet package. Modern steels and modern design make sure it harmonizes with other appliances and performs a central role in efficient kitchen operation.

The cabinet sink's steel construction provides a strong, convenient storage area and guarantees that maintenance and cleaning will take a minimum of time. The sink plays a dual role in the kitchen. It's not only the key area in clean-up operations; it also plays a vital role in food preparation.

So important is each of these functions that many kitchen planners recommend the installation of two sinks where possible. One is placed adjacent to the dish storage area, saving time and motion in the clean-up work after a meal. (Obviously, plans should be made to incorporate a modern

Continuous Steel Strip Mill Makes Appliances Available to Residents

While all due credit for modern appliance miracles should go to the designers who created them, the real credit belongs to an invention housewives never even see or think about. It is the continuous steel strip mill.

Miles away from the kitchen, the strip mill turns out the steel used in modern appliances at the rate of more than a mile a minute. This is the steel that forms the framework into which de-dishwasher in this sink.)

The second sink, say the experts, should be placed near the food preparation area. Fruits and vegetables must be cleaned, water drawn and pots drained. It's far better to have facilities for these jobs right at hand rather than have to cross the kitchen to the clean-up sink.

signers pack the wonder working machinery that does much of today's housekeeping.

Auto Is Comparison

It wasn't until strip mills were developed in the 1920's that mass production of appliances—and a lot of other taken-for-granted products such as the modern automobile—became possible.

Matter of fact, the automobile is a good comparison for appliances. There is about the same amount of steel in the modern kitchen as there is in the automobile. And a completely equipped kitchen is comparable in cost with a medium-price car.

There the similarity stops. While most people trade off the family sedan every three or four years, they maintain a kitchen in good working order for ten to fifteen years.

Backbone of Industry

The appliance industry consumes between 2½ and 3 million tons of steel each year. This includes carbon steel, backbone of the steel industry, specially formulated alloy steels which are cooked to special recipes to perform specific functions, super-strong high strength steel that provides rigidity without bulk, and the queen of them all, stainless steel.

All these steels have been carefully developed in the vast research facilities of the steel industry. There is constant improvement in quality as a result of research.

Continuous production of steel for appliances has brought them within the reach of nearly every American home. In addition to making household aids readily available, the never ending stream of metal has helped bring prices down.

Diphtheria Hits Town in Kansas

Great Bend, Kan. —(UPI)—An outbreak of diphtheria has struck this central Kansas town, claiming the life of a 6-year-old boy and threatening at least three other children.

A team of state epidemiologists was scheduled to arrive today to aid city and county authorities in planning precautionary measures against the disease.

Superintendent of Schools D. V. Swartz ordered all grade and high schools closed "for at least two days" and possibly longer.

Athletic events were also cancelled and parents were urged to keep their children at home and away from crowds.

Castle Rock, Wash. — (UPI)—Larry Williams, 14, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Stonebreaker, died Tuesday when fire destroyed the family home.
