A Meadow Wouldn't Be The Same Without the Bobolink

Bobbing just above the grass tops, teetering on a tall, flexible weed, one leg high, the other low on the less than perpendicular we e d - stem, "Robert-of-Lincoln" pours out his wild, rippling song. As much a part of the meadow as the grass, or the lark with the yellow half-moon on its throat, is the perky little character called "bobolink."

Somewhere below him, snugly fitting in a grass-lined nest, in which five pale drab eggs are resting, each erratically marked with brown lines, the little female with her olive colored plumage, somber and drab, listens to his song. She is ever alert to catch the first warning note he utters if he senses danger. If he sounds an alarm she will quickly abandon the nest so that would-be pilferers cannot mark its location by her presence.

His alarm-note sounds very much like that of the blackbird, to whom he is closely related. He is related, too, to the meadow lark, who shares the same meadow, and the oriole who builds its nest at the tip-end of a high tree branch.

Sings Constantly

While she is nesting, he sings almost constantly, his wild, rippling repetition of "bob-o-link" occasionally embellishing the simple word with trills and musical variations. His striking jacket of black and white with yellow

Twice Blessed

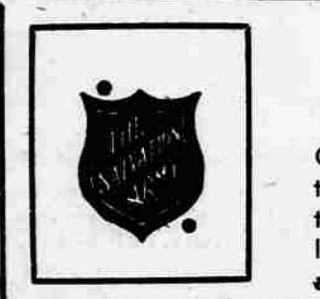

Christmas is a sparkling tree, a glowing candle, the singing of carollers. It is a child's laughter and a mother's contentment, a candy cane and a stocking hung on the TV set. It is tradition piled on tradition.

But, basically and above all else, Christmas is an expansive urge to give, to share with others all that is good.

It is a surge of gratitude for one's own good fortune, merged with compassion for one's fellowmen. The Christmas present given with love and thoughtfulness is, obviously, twice blessed.

How to share the greatest number of good things with the greatest number of those in need? That is the question.

Support The Salvation Army Christmas Appeal. That is a satisfying answer.

Religious Differences Over Birth Control Outlined; Teachings of Major Groups Told

Editor's note: This is the first of three dispatches on the birth control controversy. The first outlines the conflicting moral teaching of major U.S. religious bodies. The second reports on the actual practices of American families. The final dispatch deals with research efforts to find new birth control techniques suitable for use in underdeveloped countries.

By LOUIS CASSELS

Washington—UPI—Religious differences over birth control are primarily concerned with the methods used.

Nearly all major religious bodies—including the Roman Catholic Church—agree that a married couple may decide for medical or economic reasons to limit its number of children.

The Catholic church differs from most Protestants and Jews, however, in drawing a sharp distinction between "natural" and "artificial" means.

The Catholic teaching is essential this: Creation of children is the primary natural function of marital sex relations. The expression of mutual love and satisfaction of sex drives are secondary purposes which are legitimate only when they are not accomplished at the expense of deliberately frustrating the primary function.

Nature's Own Laws

In circumstances where there are "serious reasons" for family limitation, it is lawful for a couple to avoid pregnancy by abstaining from sexual relations during the portion of the woman's cycle when conception is most likely to occur. This type of birth control known variously as "rhythm," "periodic continence" and the "safe period method" is consistent with nature's own laws.

But in the Catholic view it is a violation of "natural law," and therefore immoral, to "mutilate" the sex act in any way. This rules out any use of contraceptives (which are regarded as "artificial" barriers to meeting of sperm and ovum) as well as such ancient birth control techniques as douches.

Part of Basic Law

It is important to the present controversy to note that the Catholic church does not regard this teaching as a moral precept binding only on its own members, but as a part of the basic natural law of the universe, applicable to all people regardless of their religion.

That is why the U.S. Catholic bishops recently opposed any help to "artificial birth prevention" programs in other countries, even non-Catholic countries.

The Protestant viewpoint, which is also held by many Jews, is as follows:

Sex in marriage is a good, healthy thing, ordained by God, and its use to express mutual love is just as legitimate as its creative function. It is no violation of natural law to separate the love-making from the creative aspects of sex, since nature itself permits the former when the latter is impossible as in cases of sterility, or women after menopause.

A Moral Obligation

According to this view, the use of medically approved contraceptives is no more a case of tampering with nature than having a diseased appendix removed, or a false tooth installed.

These religious bodies hold that a couple has not merely a right, but a positive moral obligation, to use the most effective means available to avoid an unplanned conception that might endanger the health of the mother or enlarge the family to the detriment of existing children.

Since standard contraceptive devices have been found considerably more reliable than "rhythm," most Protestants and Jews sanction their use.

While the vast majority of American church members adhere to one or the other of the two views outlined above, some special religious positions must be mentioned.

The Mormon Church teaches that large families, the bigger the better, are desirable; it disapproves of any form of birth control.

Some Orthodox Jews hold that birth control is permissible only when the wife's health would be jeopardized by pregnancy. And even then, the birth control measures must be taken by the woman—never by the men.

Greek Church Belief

The traditional teaching of the Greek Orthodox church is that a married couple may seek to avoid births only by giving up sexual relations altogether.

However, many Orthodox clergymen in America do not regard this teaching as authoritative since it has never been officially endorsed by a church council. Orthodox couples who consult their priests may be advised that birth control by any medically approved means is permissible if practiced for "unselfish reason"—after the family already has as many children as it can adequately support.

Next: The actual practices of American families.

4-H CLUB NEWS

Handy Annies

The second meeting of the Handy Annies 4-H club was called to order by Sarah Robinson, president. Michelle Ely and Eileen Pullman led the pledges.

Mary Carol Leavens took roll call which was to suggest a name for the club. Sarah Robinson appointed committee chairmen, who are Michelle Ely, telephone committee; and Eileen Pullman, refreshment committee.

For a community project the club is going to take Christmas candy and cookies to the detention home. We had everyone bring either cookies or candy and any suitable magazines we had.

Martha Merriman gave a report on electricity. At the next meeting Sarah Robinson and Shirley Epps will be models for a beauty operator who will give a demonstration.

Central Point Beef Club

The regular meeting of the Central Point Beef 4-H club was held at the home of Carolyn Sidener recently. Larry Toner and Carolyn Sidener served refreshments.

The club decided to have its meeting at the Sidener home in the future. Floyd Charley, the leader, gave a talk of different feeds and how much to feed the steer.

Members discussed the executive meeting recently. A film will be shown at the next meeting of the club. Mikie Hammond will serve refreshments.

73 MPH Winds Rake Los Angeles

Los Angeles—UPI—Gusty winds blowing up to 73 miles an hour swept through Los Angeles Sunday and uprooted trees, shattered plate glass windows, and damaged Christmas decorations and billboards.

The winds diminished today.

Damage reports were received from so many residents that four extra telephone operators had to be called into work at city hall. Most damage was minor and limited to trees toppling over on autos and against homes.

TO DONATE MONEY

London—UPI—Nobel peace prize winner Philip Noel-Baker said Sunday night he would give $28,000 of his $42,610 award money to the United Nations association to further its efforts towards disarmament.

In their consciousness there comes an urge to migrate; the urge will influence the entire flock. In a fluttering body they will take wing, with their heads pointed south. Calmly they start on a trip of hundreds of miles, stopping enroute wherever feed is available, but always headed toward the West Indies or some part of South America.

Other Names

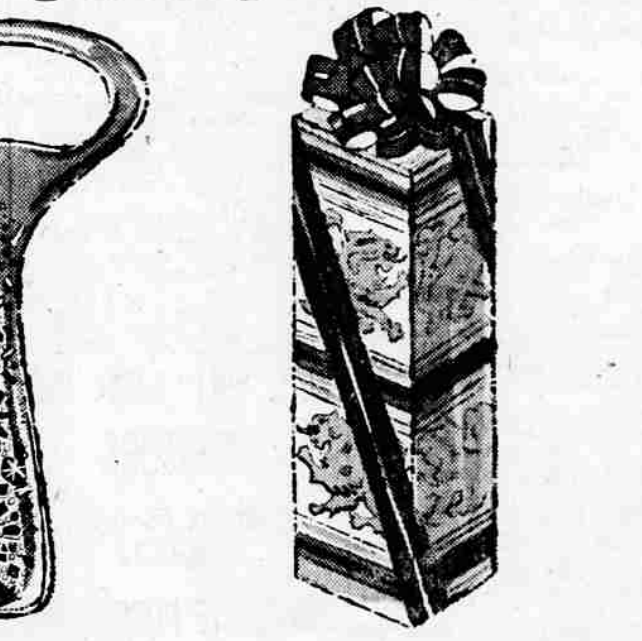

As they migrate over the invisible boundaries of states and countries, they will be known by various names. They will be called "rice-birds" or "skunk-blackbirds" or "meadow-winks."

With the spring, the male bobolinks will precede the females on the trip back north. They will locate and "stake out" suitable nesting sites. A little later the drab colored females will wing their way north over the rice fields, back to the same grassy meadows to pair off with their mates and raise their families. Many will not return; many will fall to the guns of hunters along the way.

How very lonesome would be a meadow without them; how strangely quiet the summer air without the sweet, rippling, "bob-o-link, bob-o-link, spink spank, spink" of the bobolink. May all future meadows know their song and their presence.
