Auto Industry Looks Forward To Second Best Year in 1960

Detroit—The auto industry expects 1960 to be the second best year in its history.

Although most industry officials predicted sales of about 6,500,000 cars at the time they introduced the 1960 models three months ago, encouraging sales reports since then have boosted the predictions to around 7,000,000.

That would mean an increase of about 27 per cent, or 1,500,000 cars, over the estimated volume for 1959, an increase which makes the industry forget momentarily some of the trouble it had during the year.

Hurt by Strike

Most officials feel sales would have been far above the currently anticipated total of 5,500,698 for 1959 if the steel strike hadn't interfered.

Paris shortages caused by the strike forced General Motors to close all of its assembly lines shortly after they started rolling off 1960 cars. Chrysler was also forced to close assembly lines as reserve supplies of steel gave out.

Ford avoided actual assembly line shutdowns but was forced to slow its production rate because of the steel shortages.

Only Studebaker-Packard and American Motors were able to continue full production through the crisis.

Industry Satisfied

Despite the steel shortages, however, most of the industry felt well satisfied with 1959.

The year looked particularly good compared with the recession year which preceded it, when only 4,224,053 new cars were produced by the auto companies.

Ford had to discontinue production of its Edsel in '59 because sales were lagging badly but the stiff challenge Ford passenger cars hurled at GM's Chevrolet during the year and the enthusiastic reception accorded to Ford's new small car, the Falcon, offset this and

Past Year Held Kind To Russians, Surprise To West

London—The year 1959 was one of "hard shocks and unpleasant surprises" for the West, but not so for the Kremlin with three space rockets and Nikita Khrushchev's visit to America, according to Radio Moscow.

Commentator Viktor Shradgin, in a summary of the events of the year, declared "Three Soviet space rockets launched to the sun and the moon have firmly endorsed the superiority of Soviet science and technology in the conquest of outer space."

Unpleasant Surprises

He told home service listeners: "For the capitalist West, which quite recently smiled skeptically and sniffed scornfully, the year of 1959 has been a year of hard shocks and unpleasant surprises."

"It has realized that it has been overtaken and has been compelled to admit it's lagging."

Shradgin termed 1959 "A year of great beginnings, bright hopes and good sowings."

He said Khrushchev's visit to the United States had "opened the path for a whole series of conferences of heads of governments of East and West."

Chromium, which withstands 1,000 degree temperature, may be the metal used in the craft that eventually takes a man to the moon.

The domestic demand for sugar in Australia totaled 540,000 tons in 1958.
