Scandinavian Meat Recipe Uses Spices For Unusual Flavor

The Scandinavian people are well known for their love of well-seasoned food. Unlike their Italian neighbors, who prefer the stronger or more intense spices, the northerners prefer a balanced combination of such spices as nutmeg, cinnamon, mace and cloves.

Even in meat dishes these spices are used, as in Scandinavian Meat Balls. The meat balls may be served over hot noodles, or for an hors d'oeuvre, when the size should be decreased. They are then served from a chafing dish.

For the Scandinavian Meat Balls use 1 pound ground veal and 1/2 pound ground pork, 1/2 cup milk, 1 cup soft bread crumbs, 1 1/2 teaspoons salt, 1/4 teaspoon each pepper, nutmeg and mace, 1/2 teaspoon grated lemon rind, 1 egg, beaten, flour, 3 tablespoons lard or drippings, 1 can (10 1/2 ounces) condensed mushroom soup, 1/2 cup milk.

Pour 1/2 cup milk over bread crumbs. Add veal, pork, salt, pepper, nutmeg, mace, lemon rind and egg. Mix thoroughly. The meat mixture will be soft. Coat hands with flour, then shape into 18 balls, using about 2 tablespoons for each. Brown meat balls on all sides in lard or drippings. Pour off drippings. Combine mushroom soup and 1/2 cup milk and pour over meat balls. Cover tightly and cook slowly for 45 minutes. Serve hot over noodles, if desired. Makes six servings.

Save Time

New York—UPI—Puddings, pies and brownies can bake right along with the main course of an all-in-one meal. But don't bake delicate cakes with other food, for such cakes are sensitive to the steam given off by several foods cooking at once.

Washington—Mrs. Perle Mesta, party giver extraordinary and former diplomat, says her choice of clothing for a social function is largely determined by the mood she is in at the moment. Often she makes up her mind just moments before leaving her chateau-like home or going downstairs to greet her own guests. And like women all over the world, she may change her mind and her outfit more than once before she sets out. Mrs. Mesta likes to match her "important" cocktail dresses with coats. —(UPI Telephoto)

Color Said Potent Tool To Influence Consumers

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
New York—UPI—Roses are red, violets are blue; new ways with color, are selling you.

Today's variation of this doggerel tells in one way how the experts are using colors to increase consumer buying of everything from automobiles to appliances.

One color authority is Howard Ketcham, a New Yorker, who since the early 1930s has served as consultant to business and industry.

Consider some ways color affects our buying, as related by Ketcham:

Party-Giver Extraordinary Matches Clothing to Moods

By PATRICIA WIGGINS
United Press International
Washington—UPI—Clothes are a matter of mood for Mrs. Perle Mesta, party-giver extraordinary and former diplomat.

Her mood at the moment determines which suit or gown she might wear to a benefit, luncheon, theater date or dinner party — often moments before she leaves her chateau-like home or goes downstairs to greet her own guests.

And like women all over the world, she may change her mind and her outfit more than once before she sets out.

For someone who hates to shop — and she "doesn't" have time to shop even if she liked it — Mrs. Mesta has many selections in her closets. Variety is not only a necessity for the life she leads but also reflects a fairly unhemmed-in wardrobe philosophy.

Suits, her favorite day-time garb, are a variety of colors, styles and fabrics, showing no particular devotion to any one line save for a generally slim skirt.

Dressy dresses also cover a range of styles with a partiality only to a square-ish neckline.

But the famous original of "Call Me Madam" is not hazardous in selecting or wearing clothes. She is one of the most attractively and fastidiously gowned women in Washington social circles.

She has a favorite designer who turns out specialties that suit her and her moods, usually gay.

And she has a favorite hat designer, who also keeps her preferences in mind.

Hats are Mrs. Mesta's "hobby." Sometimes, she confesses, she has found a certain hat so becoming that she has bought up a heady number of identical styles at one sitting.

Parents Offered New Information For Handicapped

Washington, D.C.—Parents of children handicapped by the absence of an arm or leg are offered encouragement and practical information in a new pamphlet, "The Child With a Missing Arm or Leg," issued today by the Children's Bureau.

Most of these youngsters when fitted with today's artificial arms and legs and properly trained, "can become nearly as independent as other boys and girls," according to Katherine B. Oettinger, chief of the bureau.

Scientific and engineering progress in developing artificial limbs has been going forward at a very rapid pace since World War II. Doctors, engineers, limb makers and therapists using adaptations of devices developed for veterans are now able to equip children with a prosthesis that lets them make most of the major motions needed in everyday life.

The earlier a child is trained and fitted to use a prosthesis, the better. The various kinds of prosthetic devices available are described simply. In addition to the adult-sized hand already on the market for both men and women, a child's hand is now being tested prior to being put in general use.

Because successful fittings and training for use of artificial limbs requires a number of skills—from those of doctors to social workers, prosthetists, therapists and nurses—prosthetic teams have been set up in a number of clinics over the country by official state agencies providing services for crippled children. Children with a missing limb are eligible for care by state crippled children's agencies which also receive federal grants — in — aid funds through the Children's Bureau.

"The Child With a Missing Arm or Leg" is the eighth in a series of Children's Bureau pamphlets for parents of handicapped children. It is available from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing office, Washington, 25, D.C., for 10 cents a copy.

So Who Needs Sleep? Chicago—UPI—Mattresses do just about everything these days except walk the dog.

One new mattress includes an electrical heating unit, good for persons who suffer from arthritis, rheumatism or muscular soreness. Another provides an automatic massage, and a third will waken the sleeper by easing him to a sitting position at a specified time.

Vanishing Vitamin Is Kitchen Problem

Kingston, R.I. — UPI — The vanishing vitamin is a real problem in the American kitchen today, says James Bromley, University of Rhode Island consumer education specialist.

Some vitamins are lost when we discard the water in which vegetables are cooked. Heat destroys vitamins, too. And nutrients often are lost when fruits and vegetables are not stored properly.

Bromley suggested these rules for safeguarding vitamins:

Don't crush or bruise fruits or vegetables.

Don't soak them in water.

Keep them in the refrigerator until ready to use.

Use as soon as possible after preparation.

Cook quickly in boiling water, using as little water as possible.

Use water in which you cook vegetables for soups, sauces and gravies.
